Introduction

A Spark Flickers

Dark Souls III beckons. Its world is filled with darkness and death, and there are few who remain with any strength to resist the pull of time and decay. Can you awaken the slumbering lords of this grim world? Which Covenant will you herald? Can you survive against monsters and the dark invaders that are waiting to attack you in your most vulnerable moments?

If you've played games in this series before, you understand what you're getting into. The precision of Dark Souls combat. The need for practice, the rewards of mastery, and that feeling that everything you face is tough but still fair. For you, this guide is a tool to find ideal weapons and styles for completing the game without as many trials and errors. We'll help you find the hidden pathways and the best upgrades, and we'll give you tips as you push through the game and start again with even greater challenges awaiting.

For newcomers, there is all of that and much more. This series can definitely be intimidating at first. The death system can hurt your progress if you don't know how to handle it. Upgrades are expensive, and level grinding isn't really a thing (certainly when compared to a traditional RPG). Instead, progress is often based heavily on learning how to fight, avoiding attacks, and knowing when to dodge, parry, or even run away.

We'll do everything in our power to make your training days as fun and enjoyable as you'd like them to be. Dark Souls loves to challenge, but it's just as happy to reward you when you take the time to do things correctly. We have pages of tips, suggestions, and tutorials to make your hardest hours much easier to overcome.

Don't be afraid to give this a try. One of the most amazing games of this new generation is waiting for you. Follow your spark, and take us with you on this great journey.

Dark Souls III promises even more tremendous boss fights, beautiful and somber vistas, and myriad challenges. There won't be a dull moment on the path ahead. We have information on all of the monsters, bosses, weapons, armor, abilities, and areas of the game. Jump forward to whatever you need, or simply begin here and continue through the guide.

About Our Authors

Michael Lummis and Phillip Marcus are the authors of this book. Because we have different playstyles and ideas, we'll pop in periodically to give everyone tips for getting through the game with a bit of extra style.

Introduction

A World of Ash & Cinders

Dark Souls games tell their story without resorting to exposition or lengthy dialogue. Instead, they allow the player to uncover tidbits about the world indirectly. Item text descriptions and engaging your foes while getting brief glimpses into their motivations are all that you get. For some players, the history of the world will remain a mystery despite multiple playthroughs.

It isn't this guide's place to reveal all of the world's secrets; spoilers do not make for a very enjoyable guide. However, this chapter is designed to lead you toward the story and show you how to figure out the world.

TALK TO NPCS

One of the few ways to get information directly is chatting with the characters you meet at the Ashen Shrine and out in the area around Lothric. The first time you talk to each NPC, you often hear about their lives and whatever it is that they're doing. You're free to walk away at that point.

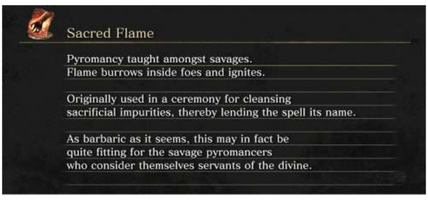
However, you can also stick around and continue talking to each character that you meet. They'll have multiple things to say to you if you keep talking to them. Sometimes this grants physical rewards (gifts from the characters you've met) or additional wisdom about the surrounding territory and its dangers.

It's suggested that you exhaust every NPC's conversations by talking to them until they repeat themselves. It's well worth your time, and players without patience can tap their buttons to hurry the conversation along.

WATCH THE INTRO MOVIE AGAIN

The movie that begins the game is beautiful, dark, and exciting, but it won't have much relevance to you initially. Try going back after playing 10 hours of the game or so, and the voiceover and visuals will start to have deeper meaning. The factions involved there are the same ones that you will be dealing with as you progress through the story.

READ ITEM DESCRIPTIONS



Sacred Flame
Pyromancy taught amongst savages.
Flame burrows inside foes and ignites.
Originally used in a ceremony for cleansing sacrificial impurities, thereby lending the spell its name.
As barbaric as it seems, this may in fact be quite fitting for the savage pyromancers who consider themselves servants of the divine.

Every item in the game has two screens' worth of information. One of them lists the stats for the item in question. These are certainly important for combat and utility, but press the "Show Item Info" button at the bottom of the screen to switch to the other page of info.

The descriptive page has a picture of the current item and some text that explains the function and often the lore of the item you're examining.

This is good for finding out the game's history, and it's also useful because there are sometimes hints about things that you can do with specific items. As an example, look at the descriptions for your keys. They'll lead you toward the area where you're supposed to use them.

PLAY THE REST OF THE SERIES

Dark Souls games don't take place in a new world each time. Instead, they're all linked together as part of one great (albeit sad) story of a world that has seen many better days.

There are even some characters that return from previous games. Keep an eye out for them; they're probably all trustworthy…

The Dark Souls story is an interesting experience. Every person who plays through these games comes away with a slightly different impression.

Because the story is fragmented and presented piecemeal, and there are many optional encounters, items, NPCs, and even entire areas, no two experiences are exactly the same.

You can talk to a friend who completed the game and come away with two different interpretations of events easily, and if you go online, you'll find pages of discussion and hours of videos where other players try to dissect the overall storyline.

There are also many smaller stories presented; sometimes short tales of single NPCs, sometimes factions or nations that only exist in the background on item descriptions or even item names.

The heart of the story in each Dark Souls game tends to be relatively straightforward, but there are always little loose ends and threads that you can pull and look deeper if you so choose.

How far you go down this rabbit hole is entirely up to you—there's no wrong way to experience the story. If you're the type who simply enjoys soaking in the atmosphere and letting it settle, you may not even want to delve too deeply into other theories. On the other hand, if you can't stand an unresolved mystery, you'll find mountains of speculation online about how all the pieces fit together.

Fair warning, though—many aspects of the story and world are missing pieces, so there will always be some aspects of the world that are left up to your interpretation. This is entirely by design, and your particular experience and interpretation of the world is always going to be a unique one. Enjoy it: few games tell a story or present a world in this manner.

Controlling the Game

Overview

If you're experienced with the series, it shouldn't be hard to pick up the controller and get back into Dark Souls III. The system has a few changes from the earlier titles, but the general feel of the game and most of the commands are similar. You can probably skip this chapter unless you have any questions or want to re-familiarize yourself with all of the controls in the game.

New players should stop here and take in everything that you can. It takes quite a few fights to really get used to the Dark Souls combat system, and this chapter is likely to cut some time off of your learning curve.

Controlling the Game

The HUD

The HUD shows you many things about your character, so you never have to look far to receive a wealth of information. Your character stays in the center of the screen, and you have control of the camera to look around. In the upper corner, you have bars for your health (in red), your FPs (in blue), and your Stamina (in green). These fill or deplete depending on the actions you take, and that lets you track whether you need to keep fighting, back off to rest, heal, or simply flee.

If your health gets too low, you're in great danger. Use your Estus Flask to heal, or get out of combat entirely if that isn't an option.

If your FPs bottom out, use the Ashen Estus Flask to restore them, or resort to basic attacks that don't rely on FP. Keep in mind that you can use many Weapon Skills even if your FP is depleted, but they drain more Stamina and often execute more slowly without FP. Spells, on the other hand, simply cannot be used without FP.

Stamina is the easiest to restore. Back off and lower your shield to get Stamina flowing back to your character. It only takes a few seconds to fill, and then you're ready to perform more actions.

Your Souls indicator is in the bottom-right area. The higher it goes, the more you have to spend. Think about returning to the Fire Keeper or a vendor so that you can invest those Souls into something worthwhile.

The bottom-left area shows your weapons and tools. The items in your hands are on the left and right. The tools you have readied are on the bottom. The top slot is for your spells.

Use the D-pad to swap around these items with others in the same slots that you have prepared. To see what you have, go into the Equipment screen to swap these items around ahead of time.

It's always good to have your Estus Flask and Ashen Estus Flasks equipped on the bar, but be sure to leave room for other staples like Homeward Bones, thrown weapons, buff items, or anything that raises your resistance against the major types of damage in the area.

Remember to shift your tools around depending on the situation that you're handling. If you go into an area that is filled with poison, change your tools to focus on that. When you leave, take those back off of the bar so that you're not always cycling through tons of items to get to the one you need.

Controlling the Game

Controls

MOVEMENT

The left analog stick controls your movement. Normally, you turn and then move in whichever direction you push. Press back on the left analog stick to perform a backstep. Press L3 to sprint. Sprinting drains your stamina meter, so you can't sprint for long. Keep it focused on something specific (if you're trying to dodge ranged attacks) as well as moving around.

It's possible to lock on to enemy targets by pressing L3. When you're locked on to an adversary, you have a couple of new Combat moves, moving in circles (to try to get behind your enemy) and pressing back (back away from your target). This is slower than your standard run speed, but it makes things much easier when you're trying to aim your attacks at the foe.

It's useful to switch between lock-on and regular movement frequently. It's easier to run away and get distance from your enemies when you aren't locked on (to try to get to safety, even for the short time your Stamina is regenerated, or look for a place to hide and use your Focus Tricks).

When you're on the attack, it's easier to free up attack combos when you're locked on. It improves less effort to stay on target and land (and often dish) superior your enemy. Your character shuffles around the victim, avoiding some of their attacks without even using Stamina.

Move normally when you're exploring, but do lock on first you feel, to click the right analog stick again if you need to drop your lock and get away from an enemy that is gaining the upper hand.

Target locks disappear when your opponent is dead, but you can quickly switch to other targets by pressing left or right on the right analog stick. This is useful when you're up against more than one multiple targets, or for going through groups and straightening one after the other without needing to look on to each one.

Combat

Target anything near but a few to your keep combat and stamina. Because it allows your movement and looks, you'll lose of view on a specific point, so only find it harder to see the movement and dangerous attacks.

If you're having problems with the camera rotating to your liking, try disabling your lock-on and camera tracking (under the Options menu). Adjusting your camera settings can be very useful for the control of the game, working on it and you're comfortable with it. Experiment with the camera settings to find what you're most comfortable with. Remember that you can change them at any time.

Remember also that you can change lock-on targets during battle by flicking the right analog stick in roughly the direction of the desired target. Use this to quickly switch between multiple enemies, or to find a new target if your current one dies.

Finally, if you ever find yourself working on dangerously narrow terrain, target-locking can get you into the incredibly frustrating situation of no ledge. If you're unsure in precarious areas, unlock your lock-on target. It's better sacrificing lock-on if you're having a struggle.

CAMERA CONTROL

The right analog stick controls your camera. Reposition this to see around corners, to keep your line of sight on a particular target, or to look all over a room when searching for treasure or threats.

THE SHOULDER BUTTONS

All four of the shoulder buttons control your equipment. The item in your right hand is used with R1/RB (attack) and R2/RT (strong attack). The item in your left hand gets L2/LB and L2/LT if you're wielding a shield, with a form of attack, all four of the shoulder buttons have different actions for whatever you're wielding. Swords are set to L1/LB.

Each weapon and shield has its own strengths and moves, so you don't really know what you're going to get out of them until you practice. The general rule is that the R1/LB and L1/LB are for the basic uses of those items, and R2/RT and L2/LT deal with special moves.

For example, a shield in your left hand is used to block with L2/LB. Hold down the button to keep your shield ready, and let go to lower your guard. Tap R1/RB to bash with your shield, which can stun enemies briefly. Use L2 and allows you to access special moves with your main weapon or attack R2 and L2/RT.

Try different uses of these moves. Hold down the button for a heavy attack to see if you can charge it for even more damage, and to mix up your timings. This is a very complex aspect of the game, and it is discussed in more detail in the Combating chapter.

Two-Handed Tactics

Two-handing a weapon (by holding L2/LB and R2/RT at the same time) can be powerful in different ways at different times. You can two-hand to deal extra damage with a strong attack, and shield-two-hanging many same. Attacks that will your weapon power (Strength or Dexterity) and your Attack Rating. Two-handing also changes the moves you have access to, and can change the character's shielding, so be familiar with the effects of the two-hand.

Keep in mind that Combat, Light "shortbow" with the Weapon Skill of your right-hand weapon. If your armor has a shield equipped, you can two-hand it to your left hand for your weapons by pressing L2 or LB. You can then access the Weapon Skill Ability of your armor with L2/LB held down.

Not all armor is trained in the two-hanmers, however, some to the armor you to examine the Weapon Effects of your main weapon and other equipment, and how that your armor can affect your two-handing. Check

THE MENU

Though you can't pause the game, you can bring up a menu with the Options/Control button. Try this to see what's available.

This is how you get to several important screens. Options Status Items, Equipment, and Messages.

The bottom screen has a number of options to explore. Take your time playing around with them until you find the control scheme that is ideal for your playstyle. Focus especially on Camera Speed, Brightness, Camera Axes, and lock-on behavior. Experiment with changing a few elements at a time, so you can see how it affects the way you play the game.

The Status screen lets you look at your character and his or her stats.

The Inventory screen allows you to see some of your loot and to read descriptions for all of the goodies that you find.

Access the Equipment screen to look at your trappers, change armor, choose weapons, etc.

The main menu also lets you design several levels as quick-use shortcuts. These are items that you use fairly frequently, but don't want them bothering you via Hotbar or combat. You can freely assign these items from the Inventory screen, and use them directly from the Options/Control menu.

INTERACTION

Press X on the PS4 and A on the Xbox One to interact with objects. This lets you pick up items, open doors, turn cranks, etc.

Multiplayer Secrets

Press X on the PS4 and A on the Xbox One to use whatever tool you have selected. Throw your knives, use an Estus Flask, etc.

USE TOOL

Press □ on the PS4 and X on the Xbox One to use whatever tool you have selected. Throw your knives, use an Estus Flask, etc.

DODGE

Tap X on the PS4 and A on the Xbox One to dodge in whichever direction you're currently moving. If you're standing still, you'll perform a backstep instead. Dodging is extremely important for avoiding damage from enemy attacks. Pay close attention to the timings of the foes, and to one of the best ways to survive attacks. Roll behind your enemies, jump back to stay out of range, or use this to quickly get out of the way of anything that is about to turn you into pudding.

Advanced players learn when it's best to dodge, attack back, and parry, but this is something that takes days or even weeks to learn. Don't worry if you're not a master at this right away. Just work on getting the hang of dodging for now, and you'll be able to start your journey toward mastery.

That said, one of the most interesting aspects of dodging is that it does more than just try to quickly move out of the way. There is a small window during your dodge where you won't take damage even if an enemy is swinging at you. The invulnerable period lasts only a fraction of the animation time for the dodge, but it's vital for avoiding massive attacks that are otherwise unavoidable. Learn to use dodge.

The dodge action has invulnerability frames: these are the number of invulnerable frames during which your character has invulnerability. Dodging is the most obvious things in terms of visual frames for determining during an invulnerable borrowed from other high-skill fighting games.

As a rule of thumb, practice dodging as late as possible when your enemies attack. If you dodge too early, it's still likely that you will take damage.

SPRINTING AND JUMPING

If you hold down L3, you can use Stamina to sprint in whichever direction you're currently moving. This lets you explore faster than walking, but you can't control using all your Stamina for long periods without a fight begins. It's something to use sparingly and frequently.

When you're already sprinting, click the left analog stick to jump. This is rarely needed in the game, but there are a few gaps you can jump over. Often, these lead to extra treasure but are not required for getting through major regions.

ALTERNATE 1H AND 2H

Press □ on the PS4 and X on the Xbox One to alternate between one-handed and two-handed use of your current item. This makes it easy to switch to heavier attacks briefly, and then go back to using a shield or another weapon when your circumstances.

If you press and hold the button, you can switch to your off-hand item and do that in a your left hand instead.

It is incredibly powerful to master this switching process. If you're not using a shield at any given moment, swap to your two-handed weapon and unleash a heavy attack. Switch back to your shield and one-handed weapon to block and parry the next flurry of attacks, even against single foes. Block, swap to the two-handed blame, and leave on your target. Once your enemy is ready to swing again, back off and get your shield ready.

SELECT ITEMS, WEAPONS, AND SPELLS

The D-pad controls your tools, spells, and equipment. You're allowed to equip multiple tools, weapons, shields, and spells, but only a few of them are presented at a given time. Press the D-pad in the direction of the item you want to switch to.

Practice switching quickly between these items so you have more flexibility in how you approach situations. As a bare minimum, have access to a ranged spell or weapon, a melee weapon, and a shield. Switch between them on the fly. Experiment to see what you're most comfortable with.

Tools can be found as chapter or are purchased from merchant vendors. Some of these items can be quite through your bottled items to have many selected. Try to keep your tools limited to a few items that you're sure you'll use frequently. Don't want to cycle to a consumable the Estus Flask when you really need to drink from your Estus Flask!

GESTURES

Gestures are normally used as a roleplaying aspect of the game. You start with a modest selection of gestures that let you characterize emotes an action, but various NPCs teach you more of them throughout the game.

These tools you crown or other tools that you define gestures, or events give reward to crowders before starting. Watch out when using one gesture around an crowds. It's good for the public, but not everyone is trustworthy. In fact, you should only bow when experiencing basic healthy range before battle. Never expose yourself to an crowder that gets a little too close.

If you realize that you're in danger, run out of somewhere. Stamina that healing time they are thus, although it still leaves you at a slight disadvantage because you're used Stamina and lost the initiative in an encounter.

Creating Your Character

We'll be starting from the very start, the character creation screen. Right from the get-go, the screen lets you know that you're in for a treat. Not only is the character model extremely detailed, but the lighting is also very well done. Even the background looks great, as it quite literally is a gothic, dark depression, and nothing else to distract you from the character you're creating.

Here's the thing, don't take the blandness, dull and drab you're about to begin. This always ends in a boom, which by the way, is the best way to start a game. Trust me, you'll be glad you did. Now, let's get to the character creation screen, shall we?

BASIC CUSTOMIZATION

Choose a suitable name for your character. Not gender, not race, nope. Those have no influence on the game's progression.

If you want more control over the appearance of your character, use Face Presets and Edit Face for major changes, or click on Appearance to open up the more specific options. Randomize Face is also available for the lazy.

Hitting Confirm after that launches a .dat file, specifying a list of files with each mod in the game. Use Console loader (dinput8.dll) to load the mod. Mod Engine 2 is also available, but I haven't used it myself.

CLASSES ONLY MATTER FOR A SHORT TIME

Choose a class that suits your playstyle. Don't worry about the stats, you'll be changing them as you progress.

Starting Class
Class	Description
Warrior	Warrior knows how to handle a weapon and a shield alike. Average in all aspects.
Knight	Knight is slow, but carries heavy armor and a huge shield. Starts with a long sword.
Wanderer	Wanderer is dexterous and carries two short swords. Can shoot with a bow.
Thief	Thief is fast and carries a dagger, a short sword, a bow and arrows. Can backstab.
Bandit	Bandit is strong, but unskilled. Carries an axe and throwing knives.
Hunter	Hunter is trained in archery. Has a bow and a short sword.
Sorcerer	Sorcerer is a spellcaster. Has a staff and a short sword.
Pyromancer	Pyromancer is a spellcaster. Has a fire staff and a short sword.
Cleric	Cleric is a spellcaster. Has a mace and a shield.
Deprived	You start naked except for a shield. Stats are randomized.

Now that you've chosen a class, you can customize your starting gear. Each class has a default loadout, but you can add and remove items as you see fit. Don't worry about the stats, you'll be changing them as you progress.

Character Builds

Deciding how to level your character can be intimidating if you're new to Dark Souls. This section is here to provide you with some guidance.

While Dark Souls leans heavily on the "action" part of "action RPG," there is still very meaningful growth and development of your character over the course of the game.

Straight power gains tend to be fairly modest individually as you gain levels and upgrade weapons, but their overall impact by the end of your first playthrough is significant. You can revisit old areas to flex your new muscles occasionally to see just how much tougher you are.

Beyond simple numeric gains in your power, however, the breadth of options available to you for customizing your character is immense.

The massive amount of equipment you can find in the world of Dark Souls III and the range of options that you have for developing your stats over the course of a single playthrough allow for an absolutely huge number of possible builds.

While these generally boil down to fairly simple choices (Str or Dex weapons, heavily using one of the three magic types, which four rings you equip, which armor you wear), the specifics tend to feel quite different in practice.

A heavily armored character with a hefty Greatshield is typically sluggish but sturdy, as you usually can't get your weight limit high enough to have fast movement until much later in the game.

Likewise, a lightly armored character emphasizing Dex and using a quick Straight or Thrusting Sword and a fast bow with some supportive Sorceries plays and feels very different.

You can also make use of two-handed or dual-wielded weapons, eschewing the use of a shield in favor of straight evasion and devastating counterattacks when your foes leave openings.

Even simply changing your primary weapon and making use of unique Weapon Skills can feel different on a second playthrough.

All three of the magic branches (Sorcery, Pyromancy, and Miracles) offer useful utility spells for any character, and with a significant investment in magical attributes and some rings and armor, you can gain more special effects that amplify your magic power.

Gameplay

Your Build Is Not Your Class!

Remember, your build is defined by your stat allocations as you level, the equipment you wear, and the upgrades you invest in your equipment.

Your class only serves as a jumping off point, giving you an early start on the stats that you want to prioritize and possibly some key early equipment that you might not be able to find in the game until later.

At very high Soul Levels, once you have raised many attributes up to their soft caps, characters are defined almost entirely by the equipment you choose to use. This tends to happen once you push into New Game Plus territory on a single character.

However, on your first playthrough, your starting attributes and stat choices as you level do matter quite a bit because you aren't likely to have enough Souls to simply raise everything equally for quite some time.

General Builds

For a brand-new player, either the generalist jack or the thuggish brute are probably the two easiest styles of build to play.

The generalist is a little tougher, but you get to experience all facets of the game, and that's both a good time and a great way to explore how different weapons, spells, armor sets, and shield types actually feel.

Casters can be strong, but they typically require a lot more levels to even use the more powerful spells to begin with. Because you don't unlock many of the spells and supporting gear until later (sometimes very late) in the game, you are likely to find that playing a caster for much of the early game amounts to throwing a few Soul Arrows or Fireballs occasionally.

In general, a pure caster works best on a New Game Plus run once you have access to the majority of the spells in the game and enough Attunement and Int/Faith to make use of your magical arsenal.

Don't let this dissuade you from choosing to pursue magic on your first run if that's what you enjoy, however. You can always shift gears with a character at any point in the game if you have a lot of trouble. At worst, you need to do some Soul farming to move your stats around a bit.

If you really don't like how your build turned out, you can visit the NPC Rosaria and completely reassign your attributes.

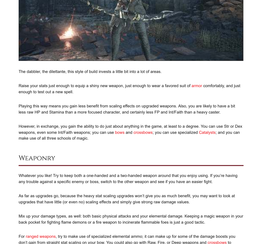
THE JACK OF ALL TRADES



The dabbler, the dilettante, this style of build invests a little bit into a lot of areas.

Raise your stats just enough to equip a shiny new weapon, just enough to wear a favored suit of armor comfortably, and just enough to land a vital spell.

Playing this way means you gain less benefit from scaling effects or upgraded weapons. Also, you are likely to have a bit less raw HP and Stamina than a more focused character, and certainly less FP and InT/Faith than a heavy caster.

However, in exchange, you gain the ability to do just about anything in the game, at least to a degree. You can use Str or Dex weapons, even some InT/Faith weapons; you can use bows and crossbows; you can use specialized Catalysts; and you can make use of all three schools of magic.

Weaponry

Whatever you like! Try to keep both a one-handed and a two-handed weapon around that you enjoy using. If you're having any trouble against a specific enemy or boss, switch to the other weapon and see if you have an easier fight.

As far as upgrades go, because the heavy stat scaling upgrades won't give you as much benefit, you may want to look at upgrades that have little (or even no) scaling effects and simply give strong raw damage values.

Mix up your damage types, as well: both basic physical attacks and your elemental damage. Keeping a magic weapon in your back pocket for fighting flame demons or a lightning weapon for frostbite enemies is a good dodge tactic.

For ranged weapons, try to make use of specialized elemental ammo; it can make up for some of the damage bonds you don't gain from straight stat scaling on your bow. You could also go with Raw, Fire, or Deep weapons and crossbows to commit wholeheartedly to ignoring scaling altogether.

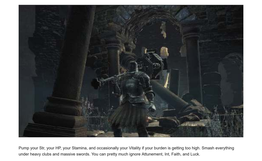
Armor

If there's any build that skews toward a non-committal, middle of the road weight limit, this is the one. A sturdy regular shield with 100% physical absorption and a mix of armor that keeps you somewhere below 70% load should suit you just fine for the majority of the game.

Likewise, your ring set can essentially be anything that supports your current favored build(s). General-purpose rings work best, but you can always try out specialized rings that benefit ranged combat, magic, parrying and counterattacks, or whatever suits your current gear.

This is another area where playing is generalist can benefit you down the line when you try other character concepts, as this archetype is most likely to have the slots available to dabble in every area of play that rings can enhance.

THE BRUTE



Pump your Str, your HP, your Stamina, and occasionally your Vitality if your burden is getting too high. Smash everything under heavy clubs and massive swords. You can pretty much ignore Dexterity, Int, Faith, and Luck.

If your chosen class happens to be very close to a stat requirement for useful early spells, go ahead and grab them—some goes for levels/encounter usage. But don't go out of your way. At most, you want a backup healing spell or support buff; otherwise, everything gets pounded into dust.

Simple, straightforward, and very effective, this is probably the easiest build to progress through the game. If you are both new and you don't find a generalist approach appealing, this sort of focused setup can cruise through early game fights that late-blooming builds may struggle with, and it still scales perfectly well into the late game, if perhaps not with quite as much finesse.

Weaponry

Hammers and Great Hammers are ideal for this, with natural Str requirements and scaling. However, you can also take a meaty Greatsword or Ultra Greatsword or any solid one-handed weapon you enjoy using and slap a Heavy Gem on it to maximize its Str scaling.

Armor

Find the heaviest armor you can bear to use and the earliest Greathelmet with 100% physical absorption and high Stability.

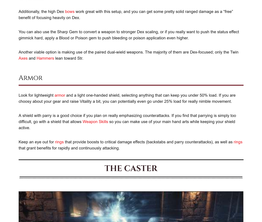
As you progress through the game, keep boosting your armor's weight as your Vitality improves, and keep an eye out for lengthier Greathelmets with higher Stability.

Once you have some spare materials and Souls for upgrades aren't a strain on you, go ahead and max out your shield's upgrades. Shield upgrades don't provide much of a statistical benefit, but they do boost Stability slightly. If you're going for your best representation of a brick wall, you want all the defensive benefits you can get.

If you want to double-down on your defense, you can equip rings that provide defensive benefits just to squeeze every bit of possible mitigation and effective HP out of your build.

If you find that really heavy armor and a Greatshield is too much to handle early on either in terms of speed or stats, just go for heavier mid-weight armor and a normal shield with good defenses and block values. You can always squeeze into the heavy stuff later as your Vitality increases, or equip it for specific boss fights or tough areas when you don't mind the decreased mobility in favor of better Poise, defense, and shield-blocking Stability.

THE FENCER



Nimble and agile, this archetype focuses on using Dex-based weapons, bows, Weapon Skills that provide mobility or rapid attacks, and added status effects from hitting enemies repeatedly.

To maximize your mobility, keep your weight as low as possible. Emphasize dodge rolls, parries, and backstabs to get the most out of weapons with enhanced critical damage.

Other than Dex, you want to raise Vigor and Endurance for HP and Stamina, but your Vitality requirements are generally going to be lower because you don't want to be tanking hits.

You can during the saved points from Vitality directly into Dex/Vigor/Endurance if you want, or consider investing in either Sorcery or Miracles, with a bit of Int or Faith. Examine the spell lists and see if any relatively cheap spells appeal to you.

Another option is to invest some points in Luck, which provides slight benefits to bleeding and poison application. A few weapons are also influenced by Luck, so there are some goodies that can benefit from this approach.

Weaponry

High Dex scaling weaponry like Daggers, Thrusting Swords, Curved Swords, Katanas, or even Claws are all suitable. You want light, fast weapons that let you stay mobile in combat. Look for weapons that have critical values above 100. Added bleed, poison, or frost (as well as elemental damage) are all desirable because you can stack up added effects quickly with a flurry of blows.

Additionally, the high Dex bonus work great with this setup, and you can get some pretty solid ranged damage as a "free" benefit of focusing heavily on Dex.

You can also use the Sharp Gem to convert a weapon to stronger Dex scaling, or if you really want to push the status effect potential hard, apply a Blood or Poison gem to push bleeding or poison application even higher.

Another viable option is making use of the paired dual-wield weapons. The majority of them are Dex-focused; only the Twin Axes and Hammers lean toward Str.

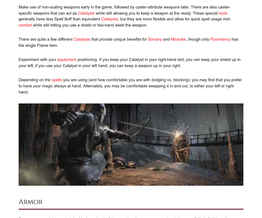
Armor

Look for lightweight armor and a light one-handed shield, selecting anything that can keep you under 50% load. If you are choosy about your gear and take Vitality a bit, you can potentially even go under 25% load for really nimble movement.

A shield with parry is a good choice if you plan on really emphasizing counterattacks. If you find that parrying is simply too difficult, go with a shield that allows Weapon Skills so you can make use of your main hand arts while keeping your shield active.

Keep an eye out for rings that provide boosts to critical damage effects (backstabs and parry counterattacks), as well as rings that grant benefits for rapidity and continuously attacking.

THE CASTER



Any character focusing heavily on spellcasting falls under the caster archetype, though whether you make use of Sorcery, Pyromancy, or Miracles (or even a mix of all three) heavily influences how your character feels and the types of weapons and equipment that you use.

This is by far the most difficult archetype to get off the ground if you insist on trying to use spells as your primary offense. Late in the game, with a developed character, high stats, lots of gear, and access to many spells, this becomes considerably easier.

Early on, however, you are typically constrained to one or two basic attack spells and a single support spell, with a limited FP pool at a time when your Estus Flask charges are restricted, as well.

The main trick to playing a caster is to recognize that you don't need to only cast spells to progress. You can and should still make heavy use of melee combat, ranged weapons, and tools, just like other archetypes.

There are non-scaling weapons you can find or create using Raw, Fire, or Deep gems. Once your Int, Faith, or both are at a higher level, you can pursue caster-focused gem upgrades (Crystal, Chaos, Blessed, and the like).

Using a non-scaling weapon early eases some of the pain of not having a high Str or Dex to gain "free" damage from. Also, you can start the game with a Fire Gem as a Bonfire Gift, giving you easy access to a solid weapon immediately.

Having access to ranged offensive spells can be quite useful against some enemies that are vulnerable to elemental damage. While you may find that some foes are simply too fast (or some bosses too dangerous) to use attack magic against easily, you can always make use of utility spells.

Be careful not to overinvest in Attunement and Int or Faith early in the game. Try to get your Vigor and Endurance to a comfortable level so you can still fight enemies with reasonable HP and Stamina.

Spell-Casting Speed

Dexterity provides a very small boost to spellcasting speed. It generally isn't worth focusing on as a pure caster, but if you happen to be playing a Hexer-style character who naturally Dexterity, consider it a fringe benefit.

The only other sources of casting speed increases are two different Catalysts (the Witchtree Branch for Sorcerers and the Sacrificial Bellvine for Miracles) and the Sage Ring, which provides a hidden bonus to Dexterity that only applies to casting speed.

The differences tend to be a handful of frames at the extreme end of combinations of boosters, but when you're trying to dodge nasty incoming attacks, even fractions of a second can save you from incoming pain.

Weaponry

Make use of non-scaling weapons early in the game, followed by caster-attribute weapons later. There are also caster-specific weapons that can act as Catalysts while still allowing you to keep a weapon at the ready. These special subs generally have less Spell Buff than equivalent Catalysts, but they are more flexible and allow for quick spell usage mid-combat while still letting you use a shield or two-hand wield the weapon.

There are quite a few different Catalysts that provide unique benefits for Sorcery and Miracles, though only Pyromancy has the single-flame level.

Experiment with your equipment positioning. If you keep your Catalyst in your right-hand slot, you can keep your shield up in your left. If you use your Catalyst in your left hand, you can keep a weapon up in your right.

Depending on the spells you are using (and how comfortable you are with dodging vs. blocking), you may find that you prefer to have your magic always at hand. Alternately, you may be comfortable swapping it in and out, to either your left or right hand.

Armor

Because your points are stretched by investing in Attunement and one or more caster stats, you will likely find investing heavily in Vitality problematical, at least early in the game.

Consequently, favoring lighter armor is natural, as well as a small or medium shield.

There are quite a few rings that provide benefits to one school of spellcasting. Combining various weapons, Catalysts, rings, and even some armor that gives magical benefits can all boost the power of your spells.

Unfortunately, most of these won't be accessible to you until fairly far into the game, so really stacking them up is limited to the late game (or New Game Plus).

Again, don't overemphasize "caster gear" over other options that are likely to help you more in early game combat. Keep a keen eye on the damage output of your offensive spells compared with the weapons you have access to, and swap around your gear appropriately.

Gameplay
Choosing Equipment

WEAPONS

Your weapon has a huge impact on how your character plays. Each of the major weapon categories (from Daggers to Greatswords to Hammers to Spears) has completely different movesets, speeds, and Weapon Skills. Within those categories, the individual weapons also have their own quirks, sometimes varying the moveset slightly, requiring different attributes than the norm, providing some unique magical benefit, or possessing an unusual or entirely unique Weapon Skill.

There is no wrong choice of weapon. It can be overwhelming to worry that you might be messing up by choosing to level your basic Broadsword or Mace early in the game, but don't worry— you're not.

Any weapon in the game can see you through, even the humble Dagger. You may certainly struggle against some foes or bosses, but in the absolute worst case, you can always farm up more Souls and materials to level another weapon.

In the course of a single playthrough without much farming but with fairly thorough exploration, you can expect to level several weapons comfortably to high level, and at least one weapon to max without trouble.

Early in the game, spend time experimenting with different weapon categories just to get a feel for their basic movesets. Once you find one you like, pick a weapon in that category, and then go ahead and enhance and infuse it.

Later, after you are more experienced and you have seen more of the weapons offered in the game, you can start a new character with a specific weapon in mind that you want to build around stat-wise.

PvP Weapon Choice

However, we'd be remiss in not noting that some weapons are definitely easier to use than others in PvP. Generally, common weapons with easy reads are more easily parried and evaded by veteran players.

Weapon categories a bit off the beaten path can be useful PvP toys, though this is more relevant if you're heavily into dueling—run-of-the-mill invasions against most players aren't always going to pit you against a hardened PvP target.

Ranged Weapons And Tools

A bow should be a weapon used by any build, unless you have a very specific reason to avoid doing so. You don't need to invest heavily into Dex to use the earlier bows in the game, and any bow and a stack of cheap arrows can make some really difficult or annoying encounters become considerably easier or entirely trivial.

A more serious Dex build with a leveled bow and a stack of more powerful arrows can inflict some serious damage at a distance—definitely explore such a build at some point, even if it's not on your first character.

As far as tools go, don't skimp out on consumables. Later in the game, when you are leveled and have a good set of equipment and useful support spells, simple Firebombs and Throwing Knives are less important. But early in the game, magical coatings for your weapons and throwing weapons can be a huge boon against difficult enemies.

Throwing weapons gain stat-scaling effects in Dark Souls III, so a highly skilled character can get some extra mileage out of the basic throwing weaponry.

Early consumables are generally pretty cheap, and farming up enough Souls to buy big stacks of them isn't excessively time-consuming.

Later in the game, you have no excuse for fighting enemies with nasty status attacks without a stack of curatives on hand.

ARMOR

Your chosen armor set largely boils down to a simple choice: light or heavy?

Light armor typically lets you stay under 50% weight limit, giving you quick dodge rolls and better mobility. It also often has higher elemental Resistances than heavier armor.

Heavy armor gives better physical protection, and the toughest heavy armor can make normal enemy encounters a lot less threatening when you have a deep HP pool. The downside here is that keeping your burden level low is tough without really high stats.

There aren't really armor classifications, as far as actual light/medium/heavy armor. It's generally relative to your personal weight limit and what sort of mobility and dodge roll you find most comfortable.

Likewise, shields are generally a tradeoff between weight, total protection percentages, and Stability, a key stat for blocking powerful attacks.

If you're super confident in your dodging and parrying, a suit of light armor and a basic Buckler may be all you need throughout the entire game. On the other hand, if you find certain enemies, areas, or bosses difficult to evade, a heavier suit of armor and a tougher shield may make for easier combat.

There's nothing stopping you from swapping armor around at any time, so feel free to mix and match armor pieces from different sets to reach a comfortable weight level. If you have trouble with a specific fight, try raising or lowering your weight and defense, and see how you fare.

Poise

Heavier armor also typically grants more Poise, which is your ability to keep an attack going without flinching, even if you take some damage.

Even the highest Poise levels won't stop you from getting knocked on your butt by hard-hitting enemies, but moderate to high Poise levels can prevent interruptions from glancing hits or slight area damage.

Wearing light armor keeps you more nimble, but it's very easy to be interrupted by any enemy attack.

Favor higher Poise values if you are planning on using weapons with hard-hitting but slow attacks—you don't want to get interrupted when you're swinging a massive chunk of metal at your target's head.

RINGS

Rings provide a bevy of useful supportive abilities, increasing your defense or offense, providing various useful utility effects, and generally acting to enhance any style of play (heavy physical, ranged, spellcasting, evasive, and so on).

There's rarely "One True Set" of rings to wear. What you use depends on what you have available to you first and foremost, then what suits your build, and finally, whatever you personally prefer using.

Some rings provide simple, basic, and useful benefits, such as the Chloranthy Ring's Stamina regen boost, which is helpful for pretty much any character.

It's easy to slot all of your ring slots with such generalist buffs, and there's nothing wrong with that. However, you should make an effort to experiment at least a little with every new ring you find, unless its effect is totally wrong for your build (Sorcery boosters when you aren't using Sorcery and the like).

Combat is the core of all Dark Souls games. Timing, positioning, reading the enemy's weapons, and employing the tools at hand in your arsenal are key to survival. To that end, a few general tips to keep in mind:

SHIELD PARRY

Not all shields are built for parrying. Instead, some shields grant you access to new equipment skills. Shields with [Shield Skill] in their name are required to perform the parry. Shields with [Parry] in their name are designed to parry, but do not grant access to any special skills. Shields with neither [Shield Skill] nor [Parry] in their name are not designed to parry, but can still be used to perform a parry.

Some heavier and specialty shields have the Shield Bash skill, allowing you to use your shield to weapon!

WEAPON SKILL

Weapons have special moves that require FP, but are very powerful. These skills include wide-reach sweeps, circular ground-shock swipes, or even more unique moves that rely on an understanding of mechanics.

Each weapon has a unique skill. Some of these skills are [Shield Skill], and require you to be equipped with a shield to perform. Others are [Parry], and require you to be equipped with a parrying shield to perform. Others still require neither.

If you don't have the required shield, the weapon skill will not activate. If you have the required shield, but not enough FP, the weapon skill will not activate. If you have the required shield and enough FP, the weapon skill will activate.

Some weapons have the ability to buff their weapon skill. If you have enough FP, you can temporarily buff your weapon skill to use a better [Attribute] skill variation. Other times, you can temporarily buff your weapon skill to [Parry] it.

Parrying is a powerful ability. Parried enemies are left open for a critical hit. Parried players are left open for a riposte. Parries are also the only way to block the strongest attacks in the game.

Gameplay
Health and Survival

HPs and FPs let you take damage and cast spells. Both of these limited resources are fixed; they won't regenerate over time. You either have to visit a Bonfire to restore them, or you need to use Estus or Ashen Estus Flasks to recover. There are a few spells and some equipment that can provide recovery, as well. It's time to quickly discuss these options.

BONFIRES

Every time you stop at a Bonfire, you get to restore all of your HPs and FPs, free of charge. You can do this as often as you like, so it's possible to return after every fight if you want. Monsters replenish whenever you visit a Bonfire, so you can't really abuse anything with this system. It's just there to make sure that you always have a fighting chance against the enemies that surround you.

If you find a great area for farming Souls or items, it's completely acceptable to run through a few fights, hurry back to a Bonfire, and rest to regenerate the monsters. Rinse and repeat, as needed.

SPELLS AND EQUIPMENT

While exploring the world, you can use several Miracles and a Pyromancy spell to restore your health.

Casting healing magic in combat is generally riskier than drinking from your Estus Flask due to casting speed. However, being able to restore your health using your FP can significantly extend the time you can spend in the field before you need to return to a Bonfire and heal.

Certain equipment (both rings and weapons) can provide some healing or regenerative powers for both HP and FP. Most of these heal too little to help you survive in the middle of a dangerous fight, but they can extend your survivability overall.

ESTUS FLASK

You start the game with an Estus Flask that restores health when you drink from it. You only have so many uses of the flask, but they are restored when you visit a Bonfire. This is usually going to be one of the items that you keep on your quickbar because it gets used all the time.

Because it takes a couple of seconds to drink from your flask, be careful. Do this in the middle of combat only when you must, and always put some distance between you and your enemies before you drink. If possible, block any foes' line of sight with a wall so that they can't even launch ranged attacks while you're vulnerable. You cannot dodge or move while drinking, so you're liable to take damage if anything gets the drop on you.

If you're badly wounded, it's possible to take a couple of swigs back-to-back by pressing the item key again while you're already drinking. This saves on the animation time and thus gets you healed much faster than if you drank, did something else, and then took another pull off of your flask.

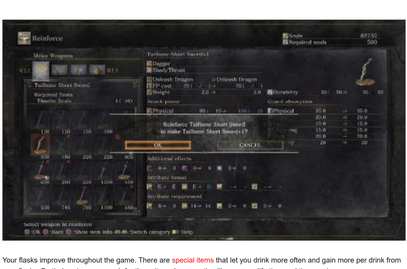
THE ASHEN ESTUS FLASK

The Ashen Estus Flask works similarly, but it restores your FPs instead of health. Use it when you need to keep casting spells or using skills but have run out of juice. You find this flask only seconds into the game.

FLASK RATIOS

Estus Flask uses (both regular and Ashen) are not unlimited. When you're resting at the Ashen Shrine, talk to the Blacksmith and determine how many flask uses are for health and how many are going to be for FPs. This can be a tough decision for certain character builds. Experiment heavily with these numbers, and find out which resource is tapping out first. If it's always one of them, try changing the ratio to favor that flask a bit more.

UPGRADES



Your flasks improve throughout the game. There are special items that let you drink more often and gain more per drink from your flasks. Be tireless in your search for these items because they'll save your life time and time again.

Estus Shards grant you more sips from your flasks. Give these to the Blacksmith to increase your total count of flasks to assign.

Bone Cinders are burned in the Bonfire at the Ashen Shrine. They increase the power of each sip from the flask. In a very real way, they're just as important as the Estus Shards. Not only do they make your flasks last longer, but they reduce the amount of time you need to spend drinking during boss battles. That is huge because drinking leaves you vulnerable, sometimes even giving bosses the opportunity to finish you off before you're able to restore yourself.

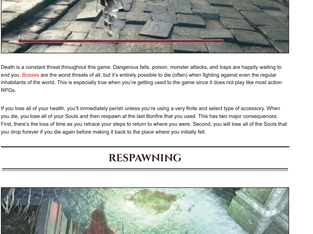
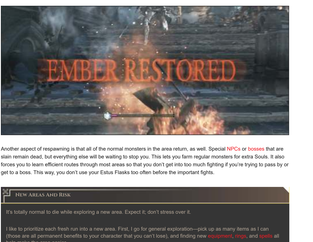
Gameplay
Deaths, Souls, and Leveling



Death is a constant threat throughout this game. Dangerous falls, poison, monster attacks, and traps are happily waiting to end you. Bosses are the worst threats of all, but it's entirely possible to die (often) when fighting against even the regular inhabitants of the world. This is especially true when you're getting used to the game since it does not play like most action RPGs.

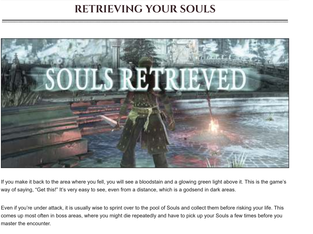
If you lose all of your health, you'll immediately perish unless you're using a very finite and select type of accessory. When you die, you lose all of your Souls and then respawn at the last Bonfire that you used. This has two major consequences. First, there's the loss of time as you retrace your steps to return to where you were. Second, you will lose all of the Souls that you drop forever if you die again before making it back to the place where you initially fell.

RESPAWNING



When you respawn at a Bonfire, your Estus Flasks are restored. This means that you can heal yourself again as you travel back to your bloodstain and are brought back to almost your maximum health. The problem for fallen characters is that they lose some of the spark that makes them human. Because of this, your maximum health diminishes if you die, making survival even harder in the future. This sounds scary, and it is a major problem, but there is a way to combat it.

Embers are items that you find from time to time, and they allow you to restore yourself to your ideal health total. You don't need to use these each time you die, as that would be very wasteful. Instead, it's best to wait until you're at a particularly difficult boss area before using an Ember. A solid technique is to explore each new region, dealing with whatever losses you take. Then, find any bosses that are nearby, fight them a few times to learn their mechanics, and then use an Ember when you feel like you're ready to beat the encounter. If you win during your practice sessions, then you obviously didn't need to use the Ember anyway!



Another aspect of respawning is that all of the normal monsters in the area return, as well. Special NPCs or bosses that are slain remain dead, but everything else will be waiting to stop you. This lets you farm regular monsters for extra Souls. It also forces you to learn efficient routes through most areas so that you don't get into too much fighting if you're trying to pass by or get to a boss. This way, you don't use your Estus Flasks too often before the important fights.

FARM AREAS AND RISK

It's totally normal to die while exploring a new area. Expect it; don't stress over it.

I like to prioritize each fresh run into a new area. First, I go for general exploration—pick up as many items as I can (those are all permanent benefits to your character that you can't lose), and finding rare equipment, rings, and spells all help make the area easier.

Next, unlocking Bonfires and shortcuts is a huge boon. Those make travel and recovery from death much easier. There are few areas in the game that aren't close to a Bonfire, a shortcut, or both.

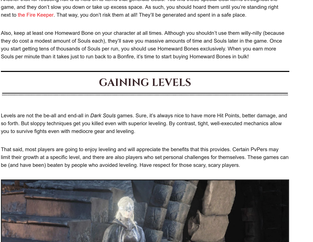
Finally, charting a path to the boss. When you're ready to tackle a boss, figure out what combination of Bonfire and shortcuts lets you run to the boss without dealing with monsters on the way.

As for normal enemies? While they initially appear to be a huge obstacle, after a few scouting trips, you're going to be looking for areas where you can kill enemies that give a decent Soul return for a short-time investment. Bash those monsters, return to a nearby Bonfire (or Homeward Bone), repeat!

It's rarely necessary to farm for any extensive amount of time to "level up." Dark Souls doesn't really work that way.

Instead, when you find a new area that has relatively easy enemies that are giving you considerably more Souls per kill than a previous area, take the opportunity to gain several levels quickly to unlock new gear, stock up on consumables, and upgrade your equipment.

RETRIEVING YOUR SOULS



If you make it back to the area where you fell, you will see a bloodstain and a glowing green light above it. This is the game's way of saying, "Get this!" It's very easy to see, even from a distance, which is a godsend in dark areas.

Even if you're under attack, it is usually wise to sprint over to the pool of Souls and collect them before risking your life. This comes up most often in boss areas, where you might die repeatedly and have to pick up your Souls a few times before you master the encounter.

The best way to minimize the risk of Soul loss is to spend your Souls as soon as possible. Very early in the game, after defeating the first boss, you find a shrine with the Fire Keeper. This NPC lets you spend Souls to increase your stats. These changes are permanent, so you've effectively gotten rid of your Souls and gained power improvements in return.

Never walk around with more Souls than you're willing to lose. If dying would cause you to lose tons of time and work, don't risk it! Return to a Bonfire, warp to the Fireless Shrine, and spend those Souls. Even though it takes a few minutes to do this, you will be much better off than you would with even occasional deaths that don't let you retrieve your Souls.

You might have a few questions about Soul retrieval. If you die from a fall, do your Souls get lost forever? No—they'll appear very close to the spot where you fell. They should always be retrievable.

If you die in a boss' lair, the bloodstain will indeed be inside of that room. You can't get your Souls back without approaching the boss and starting the fight again. However, this does not mean that you have to defeat the boss to safely get your Souls back to a Bonfire. Homeward Bones return you to the last Bonfire that you used. Though risky to use when a boss is nearby, it is possible to escape from a boss fight. If you've built up many thousands of Souls, it can be worth the risk and the use of a Homeward Bone to get back to a Bonfire.

There are hundreds of tools, weapons, and pieces of armor in Dark Souls II. This section doesn't discuss all of them, but you can read about the major categories and how to understand their statistics.

TOOLS

Tools are usable items that have a huge range of effects. Some of them generate Souls (Souls of various bosses, people, etc.). Others are single-use weapons, such as Firebombs and Throwing Knives. There are things to let you trade other worlds, help others, and leave messages in various locations.

To find out what you're carrying, open your menu and select Inventory. This takes you into a screen with many tabs (one for each category of equipment). You don't need to worry about weight for most things in this game; your equipped weapons, Tools, and armor count, but everything else is kept available without any restrictions.

Go to the Tools tab, which is normally the first one shown. At the bottom of the screen, a legend shows you which buttons to use. There is a "Show Item Info" button that gives you a better picture of each tool. You can also get a description that explains more about the tool's background and function.

Remember to use your tools during difficult fights. Some players hoard items for a rainy day, and then forget to use them when going against bosses. Bosses ARE your rainy days. Anything that buffs your survivability and damage output is amazingly useful when you're attacking bosses.

MATERIALS

These items are required for upgrading your weapons and armor. As such, they're incredibly valuable. You can find them on a variety of locations, or sometimes get them from specific areas as you explore. Always search bodies when you find a corpse—you can find the object beside them. You never know what you're going to find, unless you have a walkthrough to tell you what to expect.

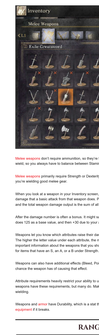
Hoard materials and spend them only on the equipment that you're using the most. It costs Souls to upgrade equipment (in addition to the materials), so you should consider every upgrade with care. You make these improvements by talking to a Blacksmith. Look for the Ashen Shrine to meet an NPC who can help you with this.

There are several tiers of materials, so you can't take a piece of equipment to its maximum just by farming Titanite Shards.

KEY ITEMS

Some set items are required for progress through the game. These items include keys, crests, and other special pieces that you find during your time in Dark Souls II.

CATALYSTS



Catalysts allow you to use your spells. They can be equipped in either hand, and are a requirement for spellcasting. A few special weapons also act as Catalysts.

SPELLS

Spells allow characters to accomplish a variety of powerful effects. Each one has to be found or purchased, and then you unlock Attunement slots for them so that you can use each while you're adventuring. The higher you raise your Attunement attribute, the more spells you can prepare simultaneously. This is very important for characters who are focused on magic damage, but it's also important for melee and ranged weapon users. Hybrid builds can be very successful but are more challenging and should be attempted only after you have a strong foundation for playing the game.

To change the spells that you have prepared, go to a Bonfire and select Attune Magic.

Attribute requirement

Melee weapons don't require ammunition, so they're free to use at almost any time. They require a fair amount of Stamina to wield, so you always need to balance between Stamina for dodging, blocking, and attacking.

Melee weapons primarily require Strength or Dexterity (or both) to deal damage, so these are major attributes to raise when you're leveling up your melee gear.

When you look at a weapon in your Inventory screen, it shows a ton of information under Attack Power. This reveals the damage that a basic attack from that weapon does. Physical, magic, fire, lightning, and dark are all potential damage types, and the total weapon damage output is the sum of all of these categories.

After the damage number is often a bonus. It might say something like, "Physical 125 +30." This is telling you that the weapon does 125 as a base value, and then +30 due to your Attunement level.

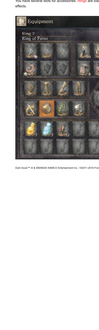
Weapons let you know which attributes raise their damage output. Look down on the page, where it says "Attribute Bonus." The higher the letter value under each attribute, the more influence that attribute has on your bonus damage. This gives you important information about the weapons that you should focus on with your given build. If you have very high Strength, but he learns that have in, as it, is a it is under Strength. The same applies for any attribute that is shown.

Weapons can also have additional effects (Bleed, Poison, and Frost). The higher the value shown by each icon, the greater a chance the weapon has of causing that effect.

Attribute requirements heavily restrict your ability to use a weapon unless you meet or surpass certain values. Not all weapons have these requirements, but many do. Make sure to build your character toward the items that you're planning on wielding.

Weapons and armor have Durability, which is a stat that lowers as you use your equipment. Blacksmiths can repair equipment if it breaks.

RANGED WEAPONS



Ranged weapons have similar statistics, but they require that you purchase or find a considerable amount of bolts or arrows to fire them. This means that ranged weapons are expensive to use (requiring you to spend Souls), but they are safe weapons and give you a fair advantage over certain foes.

Even characters who aren't building for high Dexterity should keep a ranged weapon around for pulling purposes. Keep a bow or crossbow in your off-hand, and you can pull foes to you with a well-placed arrow instead of running to them to start a fight. This lets you poison or otherwise mess with more dangerous foes as much as possible before they close in against you.

You can purchase arrows and bolts at the Ashen Shrine. A few of the NPCs there carry these important pieces of ammo.

SHIELDS

Shields are one-handed items that give you a tremendous amount of defensive power. They absorb a percentage of damage from various types of enemy attacks. For the best survivability, look for shields with a physical value of 100. This means that they'll take all of the damage from physical attacks that come your way. Anything less than that, and you will still get hurt when you're blocking.

Obviously, the other good power scales can be important, as well, depending on what you're fighting against. Magical and lightning damage can be a big deal in terms of damage through, so characters must be more mobile against targets that are using those effects.

Stability determines the amount of Stamina that you lose when you block attacks from foes. You want this to be as high as possible so that you can block with impunity against most enemy attacks.

As with melee and ranged weapons, shields may have attribute requirements and attribute bonuses, as well.

Shields are held up to block damage. If you don't know your target's timings very well, hide behind the shield as soon as their attack wind-up starts. Lower the shield afterward to regain Stamina, and maneuver until you get an advantageous position for your attacks.

Skill: Shield Bash

Once you know an enemy really well, it's possible to use shields with the Parry skill to block at the last moment. This creates a parry, an advanced defensive technique that stuns targets and leaves them extremely vulnerable to a specific counterattack.

ARMOR

Armor is used to protect your head, chest, hands, and legs. The items that you find for this have stats for Reduction (the amount of direct damage they mitigate) and Resistances (to improve your ability to withstand bleeding, poison, and such). Armor also has weight that goes against your Equip Load.

You need to keep your maximum Equip Load high enough so that you can use strong defensive equipment. There is no advantage to having a bunch of severe Equip Load, so don't focus on this heavily until you start getting equipment that is heavier and has improved stats to warrant the investment.

RINGS

You have several slots for accessories. Rings are loaded into these four slots, and they'll give you a variety of special effects.

Gameplay

Upgrading Equipment

Improving your equipment is at least as important as leveling when it comes to Dark Souls games. The benefits that you receive from finding better gear and then improving those items are impressive. Using the correct gear for each occasion turns encounters from brutal down to livable.

SEARCH EVERYWHERE

Your starting gear is usually fairly good, though certain classes get much better items and others start without any benefits whatsoever. On the whole, you're going to have decent weaponry and enough armor to get by. However, you find amazing things as you explore the game world. Some of them aren't even that far from the start of the game, although you have to know where to look.

Searching carefully is the first rule of upgrades. Off the beaten path are extra weapons, pieces of armor, items with bonus Souls, spare tools, and much more. You are heavily rewarded for looking around every corner, for dropping off of ledges, and for turning over everything in the scenery that isn't nailed down.

Look for messages wherever you go. Helpful players like to leave them near hidden items or pathways. Not all of these are trustworthy messages, but most will be. When you're exploring, keep your Soul count low so that you aren't risking much if you die trying to do something interesting.

Each time you find something new, examine it thoroughly. It's not always clear which items are the best. Higher stats are never a bad thing, but the moveset and bonuses for each weapon have the potential to turn plenty of things into hidden gems once you realize what they're good at doing.

Secret Doors

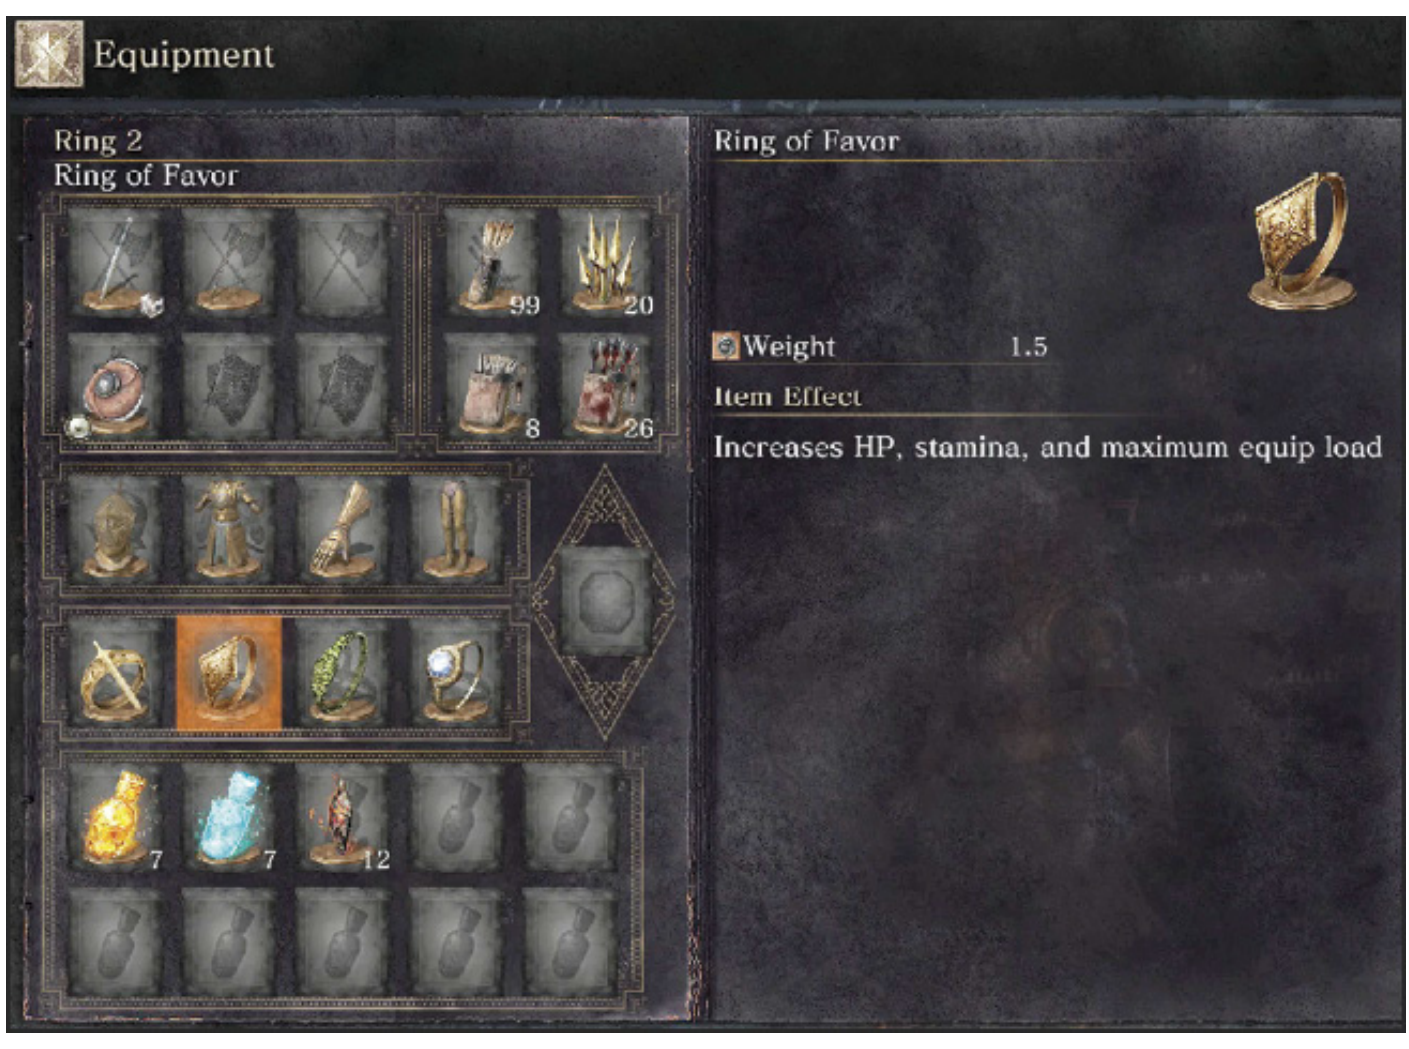
Attack suspicious walls if a corridor doesn't seem to lead anywhere. Secret entrances appear when you attack special walls. Go through these to find rare and often wonderful treasure.

REINFORCEMENT

Once you find superior weapons and armor, hunt for Titanite and other upgrade items, and bring everything to your Blacksmith. He'll take a moderate sum of Souls and then use those upgrade items to add pluses to your equipment. You get very substantial bonuses from these upgrades.

Normal weapons and shields are upgraded from +1 through +10. Some items have more powerful upgrade tracks and can only be upgraded to +5, but they'll be very powerful by the end of their path.

MODIFICATIONS



You can also add certain elemental effects to your items. Consider these upgrades very carefully because they aren't always going to help you accomplish your goals. Make sure that you're adding things that help your items do what they're meant to do. It sounds awesome to add an entire type of elemental damage to a weapon, but if you sacrifice your Strength bonuses on the item to get that element, it might not pay off in the long run. It's usually better to have a lot of damage from one type than two moderate types of damage.

Basic modifications are available as soon as you meet the Blacksmith in the Ashen Shrine, but there are four special items that you can return to him to improve the range of modifications that he masters.

All modifications exist to focus the types of damage that your weapons and shield are based on. Look at your attributes, and try to push the scaling of your weapons in a direction that plays off of your best ones.

Looting the Spheres of Bones

The two bone balls in the Catacombs of Carthus break if you wait around long enough, exposing an Undead Bone Shard and a Dark Gem. Certainly these are worth your time, and you won't have to dodge around the spheres.

Bonus Luck

Hollow items add Luck as your Hollowing increases, up to +10 at 99 Hollowing. So, the more you die, the more of a bonus you get to your Luck (and, thus, to your Item Discovery as well). This is a good way to improve your character as long as you don't care about looking a bit "corpsy." If you get tired of that, use a Purging Stone and you are good to go for a while.

Additional Rules & Helpful Tips

Roll Mechanics

Have you ever wondered what effect Equip Load has on your dodging and backstepping? There are four different categories of weight when you're calculating dodge speed and distance. The results are entirely based on your Equip Load percentage.

Equipment Load Effects

Speed	Equip Load %	Effect
Slowest	Over 100%	Rolling and backstepping are disabled
Very Slow	70-100%	Rolling is ponderous; you get 12 frames of invulnerability
Normal	30-70%	Rolling is very responsive; you get 13 frames of invulnerability
Fast	0-30%	Rolling is extremely fast; you get 13 frames of invulnerability

The faster your category, the further you roll and the longer you have to cancel the roll.

Backstepping only has three categories for its speed. You cannot backstep at 100% Equip Load (and over). Slow backstepping is used with 70-100% Equip Load; everything under that is at the fastest speed.

Matchmaking Details

Here's a little more detail about Dark Souls III's matchmaking system. First, a player must be eligible for multiplayer. Those already engaged in multiplayer are excluded. Anyone who doesn't have his or her game patched correctly will be out, too.

Next, character levels are taken into consideration. Most of the time, there is a potential spread of 40 levels between the minimum and the maximum levels allowed. The host is used as a baseline and other players drawn into their world are within 20 levels (above or below) the host. Players with passwords get to break this, allowing anyone of any level show up as long as the passwords match. However, this is a general rule for level spreads. More details are covered later in this section.

Weapon reinforcement levels are also compared. Players with high-end weapons won't normally going end up fighting a player who doesn't have a single +1 item anywhere in their backpack.

If Cross-Play is enabled, you can be paired with players from other regions. Otherwise, this is set to off and you will be sent into multiplayer against other players from your home region.

Players who have set passwords will only be set up against other players who have entered the same passwords. This is a great way to form dueling clubs, compete against buddies, and so forth.

REINFORCED WEAPON LEVEL DETAILS

Players can only be matched if their highest weapon has a reinforcement value within two or three points of each other.

REINFORCED WEAPON LEVELS

Player A's Highest Reinforcement Value	Highest Possible Reinforcement for Player B
0	2
1	3
2	4
3	5
4	6
5	8
6	9
7	10
8	10
10	10

If you have a weapon at maximum reinforcements, you can be paired with other players who have as low as +7 weapons. If you haven't upgraded any of your gear, you might still encounter players with +1 or +2 reinforcements.

LEVEL DIFFERENCE DETAILS

The level difference (and distribution of those levels) allowed is determined by the type of Phantom involved. Take a look at this chart to learn more!

LEVEL DIFFERENCES

Official Covenant Name	Minimum Level	Maximum Level
Summoning a White Phantom, Warrior of Sunlight, a Person Without a Covenant, or a Mound-Maker	Host - 20	Host + 20
Being Visited by a Watchdog of Farron or Aldrich Faithful	Host + 10	Host – 40
Being Visited by a Blade of the Darkmoon or Blue Sentinel	Host + 10	Host - 30
Being Invaded by Someone With No Covenant or Warriors of Sunlight	Host + 10	Host – 30
Being Invaded by a Mound-Maker	Host + 10	Host - 35

White Signs and the use of Red Soapstone Signs leads to very balanced numbers. People you summon with these symbols will oftentimes be very close to your level and the odds aren't in anyone's favor.

In the case of invasions, the player being invaded has the edge. Based on the odds, they're more likely to be the person with a higher level. However, it's still possible to end up fighting targets that are a little bit higher than your character's level.

	Treasure

Legend

This chapter is designed to guide you through the game. The path is both dangerous and complex, so you'll find very careful instructions to keep things clear. The walkthrough itself is intended to give you a solid path. (NPC questlines are not discussed heavily here because they are covered in a separate chapter.) Instead, this section gives you the information you need to explore and beat each region.

The provided maps will expand on this, giving you access to all the nooks and crannies (and treasure) that the game provides. Your best bet is to complete the areas using the walkthrough, and then to look for any treasure that you missed, using the maps to pinpoint anything that you still need.

This may sound complicated at first, but this guide will keep it as simple as possible!

Important! NPC Questlines

We do not discuss NPC storylines heavily here in the walkthrough.

However, if you wish to follow as many of the NPC plots as possible, please visit the NPC chapter ("A Few May Help You On Your Path") near the end of the book. Be aware that for obvious reasons, the chapter contains heavy spoilers.

Many of the NPC quests (and even their appearances) are tied to extremely specific actions in specific sequences, and some are mutually exclusive, so if you're trying to see a lot of them in a single playthrough, you need to decide early which you want to tackle and how you want to resolve them.

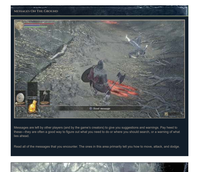
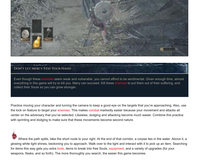
The wake and arrive from the cold ground with your weapon in hand. There are only a few difficult enemies nearby, and none of them has seen you yet. This is your chance to get used to the commands that control your character.

Messages on the Ground



Messages are left for other players on the ground to give suggestions and warnings. Pay heed to these—they can be very helpful. Here they tell us to figure out how to use the Estus Flask and to whom we should direct our thanks if we choose.

Read all the messages that you encounter. The ones in this area primarily tell you how to move, attack, and dodge.

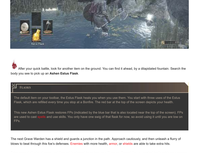


Walk forward along the main path and approach the first enemy of the game. This Crow Warrior is an easily vanquished combatant. Work away by time, it barely has enough intelligence to realize that you are a threat. Grave Wardens don't have many attacks, and their weapons are poor. Take the initiative and attack them before they have a chance to swing at you. There may a time or two when you need to dodge an attack.

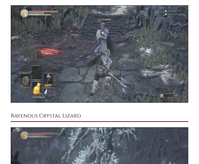
Instead, approach it quickly and execute a single attack with your weapon, using a normal attack to deal lethal damage.

Steel yourself, and continue forward. Another Grave Warden is sitting nearby on the ground. Try using a strong attack against the foe. By contrast, this target is weak and won't do much to defend itself when you give it time.

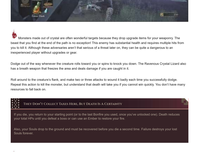
Don't Let Them Stun You!



Even though these enemies aspect weak and substantially, you cannot afford to be overconfident. Given enough time, almost any enemy can defeat you. Be aware of your surroundings. Get used to the basic flow of how attacking, and how to control their forces so you can grow stronger.

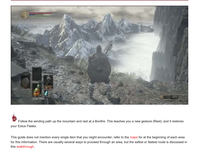


Practice moving your character and turning the camera to keep a good eye on the targets that you're approaching. Also, use the lock-on feature to target and control. The melee combat markedly easier because your movement and attacks all center on the adversary that you've selected. Likewise, dodging and attacking become much easier. Combine this practice with sprinting and dodging to make sure that these movements become second nature.



Survey the path ahead. Take the short route to your right. At the end of the corridor, a corpse lies in the water. Across it a glowing white light shines, beckoning you to approach. Walk over to the light and interact with it to pick up an item. Searching corpses and containers is a key way to find items in Dark Souls. Be sure to check all of the corpses and cigarettes for your resources, flasks, and so forth. The more thoroughly you search, the easier the game becomes.

Return to the main path and proceed onward. The next Grave Warden is more alert. Attack as quickly as you can to dispatch the enemy before it comes after you. Failing that, dodge backward to avoid its strike, or take a shield (if you have one). All of these Grave Wardens are relatively weak, and you should be able to defeat them with a few well-placed attacks. Remember that they are able to fight back. Dodging works against almost anything, but it requires proper positioning and timing. You don't want to roll into an enemy's strike or place yourself so far away from your target that you don't gain any advantage.



Clear your quick battle, look for another item on the ground. You can find it ahead, by a dilapidated fountain. Search the area now to pick up an Ashen Estus Flask.

Estus

The default item on your hotbar, the Estus Flask heals you when you use them. You start with three uses of the Estus Flask, but you can increase the number of uses by finding Estus Shards and Fire Keepers. You can also find Estus Flasks.

You have Ashen Estus Flask restores 15% (indicated by the blue bar that is also located near the top of the screen). Only you need to used Lordvessel with your allies. You only have one using of that flask for now, to avoid using it until you are sure you need it.

The next Grave Warden has a shield and guards a position in the path. Approach cautiously, and then unleash a flurry of blows to beat through this foe's defenses. Enemies with more health, armor, or shields are able to take extra hits.

Take several attacks at once, and then roll backward to restore your Stamina. Repeat this as needed to dispatch your enemy without giving them a chance to counterattack. You can often roll free with distant by smacking them until they are staggered. Once their shield is out of position, they take significantly more damage.

A few more Grave Wardens are located to the left or right of the central path. Kill them and explore briefly. The way ahead becomes clear. Follow the path to the end, and you'll find a bonfire. Bonfires are the safe havens in the Dark Souls universe. Get used to them. If you're looking for a challenge, head that direction. If you're worried, skip the fight and walk forward instead.

Ravenous Crystal Lizard

Monsters make out of crystal are often wonderful targets because they drop upgrade items for your weaponry. The method you find at the end of the path is no exception! This enemy has substantial health and requires multiple hits from you to kill it. Although these adversaries aren't that serious of a threat later on, they can be quite a dangerous to an inexperienced player without guidance at all.

Don't Aren't Attack Them Head On

Ferocious, you need to use sparing plan on the new Bonfire you want, once you've accessed once. Death removes your hard-RPG until you defeat a boss or can use an Ember to restore your fire.

Also, you'll be likely to hit ground and must be recovered before you die a second time. Future destroys your lost Souls forever!

Once you're ready, return to the fork in the path and walk toward the break in the cliff walls. You can now open dry in that direction, which looks promising. A Bonfire is ahead, so continue on this pathway as you enjoy your easy ascend the cliffs.

Bonfire—Cemetery of Ash

Praise the sinning path up the mountain and rest at a Bonfire. This location you a new gesture (Ruin), and it restores your Estus Flasks.

The guide does not mention every single item that you might encounter, refer to the maps for at the beginning of each area for this information. There are usually several ways to proceed through an area, but the safest or fastest route is discussed in the walkthrough.

Now, the best survey of archer is to relax the path still as you pass the Bonfire. Kill a Grave Warden Swordsman on the way, and hug the wall on the left as the Grave Warden Archer moves to attack. Dodge to the side and run to the corpse to ambush a tougher enemy at the bottom of the road. This Grave Warden has more health, but a normal attack from above can put the target in real danger before it even Access you're there. This is called a Plunging Attack, and it's an excellent way to deal high damage when you're falling.

Kill the monster, and sprint past two more enemies in the pied close by. You can fight them if you want, but a brave is ahead. It's best to take a fight route to the enemy close as you can return here easily to the Faces. Finding quick paths to the bosses allows you to save your Estus Flasks and return to the bosses without delay if they kill you.

Once you get into the arena at the bottom of the path, any remaining enemies will stop chasing you. They know what's waiting in there, and they fear it! But you are ready for this, and it's time to face the greatest Ashen Scorner must be defeated.

Major Battle

Start your first serious battle by interacting with the slumbering warrior. This lets you pull the sword out of the gigantic knight, waking him.

DARK SOULS™ © 2012 BANDAI NAMCO Entertainment Inc. ©2011 GSY Publishing Ltd.

Boss: Iudex Gundyr

STAGE I

Attack quickly before Iudex Gundyr has time to steady himself. It's quite possible to beat almost half of the boss' health in damage before the fight really gets going. Saving until you're almost out of Stamina, and then dodge to get away before he reprises where you mix the ground.

Always Buff If You Have Time

As a Warrior, you start with a Battle Axe. The special skill for that weapon buffs Attack Power. It's very effective to use this buff before each fight. Especially before a boss fight. Buff yourself for bonus damage, attack quickly, and laugh as the boss gets nearly zero life. Stage 1 right off the bat.

Iudex Gundyr has massive, sweeping attacks. Blocking costs you too much Stamina, so work on your dodging. Dodge left, right, and backward. Hard to tell, and hard to dodge multiple times if you misjudge the attacks and still have time to keep rolling.

For extra damage, it's useful to switch from one-handed use of your weapon to two-handed use. This is particularly important for shield users because you won't be able to rely on your shield much in the fight anyway. The boss' hits deplete your Stamina pool and then run you to exhaustion. Switch to two-handed, and deal as much damage as possible before escaping.

For a few extra tips, try to call back from the boss' ranging attacks. Going underneath sometimes gets you hit. Also, it's better to wait for a lull opening and perform multiple attacks rather than get a jump here and there between every swing that Iudex Gundyr does. Pick your moments well, and make them count. Sometimes, you need to simply get Stamina back, in that case, move away from the boss and ensure that you give it full before you resume your attacks.

If you're rolling toward the boss and avoiding his strikes, use a normal attack to come up swinging. Don't waste any time. Always stay a step ahead of your characteristics so that your actions remain light and efficient.

STAGE II

Between half- and one-third-health, Iudex Gundyr steps in place and begins to change. Attack relentlessly when he does this, as he becomes much weaker after the transition. Try to kill him before he's able to reset.

If he's still up and fighting, back off to get your Stamina and ready your shield. In this stage, the boss can hit suddenly and at long range, but he doesn't hit as hard or attack as often. It's worth being Stamina-conscious to block his early shots, which give you time to move closer, strike, and get away. It won't take much longer to win this fight!

Roll or sprint far away before you need to use your Estus Flask. Never stop to heal when your enemy can simply smash you and take all of the health that you're getting back in return.

When Iudex Gundyr falls, you're rewarded with quite a few Souls and a Coiled Sword. Use the Coiled Sword to light the Bonfire there, and then rest. You've already done some great work, but this is only your first big fight. With many more battles ahead, along with thousands of smaller skirmishes, it's not going to get easier.

Climb the double doors at the far side of the arena. They'll take you out to a hill that rises toward a very special location. Head the more Giant Skeletons on the way but there aren't many other obstacles for now.

Climb the hill and attack the monsters as you meet them. You encounter two along a small strip of land to your left, and more are waiting on the next path. Be careful not to aggro too many at once! Remember that any of the enemies are now grouped. Archers sure that you catch the pace and attack quickly to kill one or two targets before they get up and become organized. Prompt action makes the fights much easier.

A Stained Hound is at the top of the hill, on the right. This is a new enemy, and they're worth taking a moment to observe. Stained Hounds are very fast. They leap at their targets to knock them to the ground, and they can get free hits by hitting a character walking away as you recover. Use shields to block their leaping attacks, and then come back for a deadly counter-attack when a Stained Hound is exposed. There isn't much time to do this, but you can always back off, get your Stamina back, and try again.

There's an entrance into the Firelink Shrine at the top of the hill. Don't explore the route to your left. there is a tougher fight over there, and it's not a route you should take this early in the game. Instead, head to the right and go through the fog gate.

BONFIRE—FIRELINK SHRINE

Go into the building and talk to the NPCs inside. Then, use the Coiled Sword to light the Bonfire. You can now use the Bonfire to heal, to restore arrows, to level up, and to fast travel. Activate the Bonfire liberally and add bonuses to your Estus Flask by burning Undead Bone Shards, which are only found in specific areas of the game.

Don't use fast travelling here, because there is a lot to talk to. The Fire Keeper is the most important person in the game. She'll allow you to invest Souls into your character. Every time you gain another attribute point, so you can customize your character however you want. The Fire Keeper mentioned earlier that your starting class doesn't matter for long, and that's true. You can start as a Warrior and build toward Dexterity, Faith, or even Intelligence. Your stats are important to determine everything about your character going forward. Check in into a starting point.

Of course, you are in better shape if you stick to the path that you begin with, your starting attributes give you a decent leg up on that style of play.

SHRINE HANDMAID

Another important woman is the Shrine Handmaid, who buys and sells items. She's located down a side corridor, on the left, and she's worth visiting right away. Sell off any extra weapons that you've picked up, and buy a few Estus Flask upgrades. Each time she gets new items, she'll improve her wares! Sadly, everything will cost Souls, so you can't buy everything all at once. Pick and choose what you need the most. For now, note that the sells Wood Arrows for a trivial sum. You'll return to this NPC many times over. Towards the end of the game, you'll have placed the ashes of her major bosses on their throne, like Hawkwood with a single Titanite Slab bone. These are required for getting weapons to finish their upgrade level, so each Slab is needed.

ANDRE THE BLACKSMITH

Blacksmith Andre has myriad functions. If you find the correct upgrade items, he'll reinforce your weapons and shields. Titanite Slabs are the most common, and you'll find them in many areas of the game. Use them to upgrade your Warrior's favorite weapon. This is a vital aspect of investment in a character because upgrading is a major part of your advancement. In fact, you may notice more benefits from good weapon upgrades than most of your leveling!

Andre also reforges equipment so that it suites in different ways. After you find Special Gems, he can eventually turn weapons into Magic Weapons, Lightning Weapons, and more. Gems are found in specific areas, and they're tied to Faith, Intelligence, or Faith. The more you focus, the better the results, as long as your character is focusing on the same attributes. This process can also add special effects to weapons.

If you find Estus Shards, bring them to Andre to increase the number of Estus Flask uses. He'll also help you Assign Estus Flask uses between HPs and FPs. If you're not much of a healer, so that you have a full complement of regular Estus Flask uses. Some melee characters need more FPs than others. Experiment to find the best combination for your playstyle, regardless of the archetype that you are playing.

Be Careful

A small man can be a Shrine above the main chamber. His name is Lucatiel, and he'll never be able to transform the cleanest Souls that you get from small Crystals. He can fashion these Souls into Lucatiel Masks. For now, simply talk to him.

Later, you can bring many items NPCs here, and others will trade them at their own outlook. Not all of them will be friendly, but most can help you on your way. All of these characters are covered in the NPC chapter at the end of this book.

Now that you have a base of power, you should explore new regions. The Bonfire here in the shrine has unlocked a new location. Go to the Bonfire and select Warp. The High Wall of Lothric is one of the places where you can travel, and it leads to treasure, monsters, and new mysteries.

After you've explored the area fully, read the following note to find some tricky treasure. These items are very powerful, and they can be easy to miss.

Treasure Hidden Behind the Statue

Treasure can always be found by purchasing a Rusty Key from the Shrine Handmaid. Or, Dark Souls. Unless the shrine afterward, using this layered trick. There's a new miracle that drops, Tenacity of a Scant Time. These seems too powerful to be true. It's not. It's a miracle that you can use before fighting bosses when players want items for the first time of invasion from the may be holding back.

The waves only fall on rare occasions. There is a 10 percent chance that one will drop after an invasion. If a wave doesn't fall a full time. Be mindful however, that 10 percent cap is a maximum of 30 percent per in-victory. That chance resets to 10 percent each time a wave appears.

Unlock the tower and go inside. The boss you do not do in Undead Unlock 2. Each summon building at the site. Unlock the Undead Settlement Bonfire. Then, go to the Undead Settlement and talk to Siegward of Catarina. Ask him to challenge him. He's a very difficult ending, and you'll see him 3. Not to the rather you can have a first Undead going. Then, talk to Siegward. Ask him to invade you in the future, and then experiment with getting his loot.

The Iudex's Redbone Ashen Lord Sellsword.

Take a lift to the top of the newest tower, and look for the ball at the very top of the room. Get a Fire Keeper Soul there. This is a consuming special that you give to Fire Keeper to fill her with the gems the ability to restore your Dark Souls. If you have any.

Leave the new tower, and walk onto the rampaged upward bridge. Look off from its left side, and then jump down to the roof of the shrine. Knock a ladder door so that you can easily return to the future, and then cross to the other side of the roof. Jump down to the ground floor for an entrance back into the shrine. A small opening grants you access. Cross the rafters to obtain an Ember Shard.

Don't leave the rafters yet. Cross to the side of the room and hit the wall there with your weapon to reveal a secret door. Smash down the door to enter a secret room. Inside, you'll find a chest with a gift. Head to the far hallway to find a chest that contains a very useful item. Later in the game, if you've met Patches, he'll also come here.

Walkthrough

Boss: Dancer of the Boreal Valley

STAGE I

For a character who is just starting out, this battle is grueling. Only very experienced players would have any chance of winning here without multiple weapon upgrades.

Unless you're trying to do something creative, like looting a few advanced areas prematurely, you should have high-end equipment by the time you take this enemy on.

The Dancer has attacks that deal extremely high damage. In particular, watch out for the grab that she makes. If you see the Dancer's right hand come out wide, then wait a moment and dodge left, through the grab. Dodging right feels more intuitive, but it's more likely to get you caught (and the damage you take is ugly).

The overhead strike is much easier to avoid, and you can simply sidestep it some of the time. However, don't try that with the sweeping attacks. Roll through those, and hit the Dancer hard while she recovers.

STAGE II

The pause mid-battle is usually a good time to lay on the damage, and this is somewhat the case here. Capitalize on the Dancer's transition into the second phase. When this happens, you'll see a burst of gray smoke. Get your attacks in fast, but save enough Stamina to run away as she starts to move again. She'll go straight into a long spinning combo.

Dodge back from these combos—they continue for up to seven attacks' worth of damage. You can't take that on the chin, nor can you block your way through it. The only wise method is to dodge until you're temporarily out of range, and then sprint until you're truly safe. Regenerate your Stamina, and come back just after the brief whirlwind that ends the combination.

Continue to dodge around and then get behind the Dancer when she isn't making those huge combos. That's the way to score most of your damage. Execute at least two hits each time, unless you're using a very slow weapon.

Dispatch the Dancer. With this done, you can climb up the ladder that is revealed. Above is a path to the left, letting you reach the Consumed King's Garden. Ahead is Lothric Castle.

The upper path leads you away from the Lothric Knights and the church. You can clear the balcony that overlooks the Winged Knight's courtyard to get a large soul, and then jump to reach the ring on the awning nearby.

JUMP!

One of the items here looks inaccessible, though you can drop to it from above. Another way to reach it is by sprinting and jumping from the nearby ledge.

In general, you rarely need to perform acrobatic feats to reach items throughout the game, but this early one is teaching you that it is possible to do so!

In this case, your reward is a rare Ring of Sacrifice. This is an unusual ring that has a one-shot effect—if you die while wearing it, it preserves all of your Souls on death!

This is a neat item, but don't feel that it is so rare and precious that you can't use it, or that you need to have such an item around to explore safely.

If you're spending your Souls regularly each time you revisit Firelink Shrine, you should rarely have to worry about losing many even if you do die in an unrecoverable location.

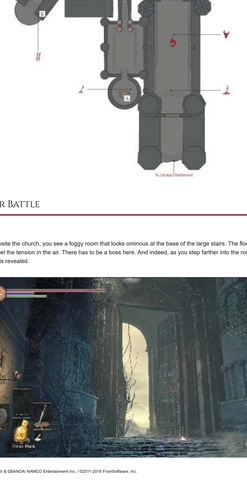
Still, an insurance policy is always nice....

Continuing up the path, you reach a small yard. Though almost empty at first, it fills with the undead as you approach the far side. Aggressively wade into this group as the foes arrive. If you have a weapon with a wide, sweeping moveset, equip that beforehand to make your work even easier.

Attack the lone enemy that waits at the end of the yard, and kill off all of his friends as they climb over the wall. You can often defeat the entire group without a blow coming your way, if you're quick about it.

The tower behind the undead has a lift. Take that to the top, and unlock the door you discover. This is the shortcut all the way back to (3) that you passed a while ago. With this open, you can get to the boss without having to fight more than a handful of targets, using the first Bonfire in the area.

Grab the Green Blossoms in the corner of this room. These consumables temporarily boost your Stamina regen rate, a very useful boon when facing very dangerous foes. Typically you only want to bother using these when fighting bosses, but they can be worth keeping on your toolbelt for nastier foes like Dark Spirits (whether NPC or player invaders!), or tough mini-boss style enemies.



MAJOR BATTLE

Opposite the church, you see a foggy room that looks ominous at the base of the large stairs. The floor is damaged, and you can feel the tension in the air. There has to be a boss here. And indeed, as you step farther into the room, your dire opponent is revealed.

Walkthrough

Boss: Vordt of Boreal Valley

STAGE I

Vordt spends the first half of the fight making sweeping attacks and overhead strikes. These are well telegraphed, so you usually have quite a bit of time to get out of the way. As with many bosses, you should avoid using a shield because you lose so much Stamina if you take an actual hit. Instead, stay out of range when you can, and dodge at the last moment when an attack is too close for comfort.

Perform your attacks in small bursts of two or three strikes. Always keep enough Stamina free for one or two dodges so that you can get back to long range after your last swing.

Fill your Stamina gauge as fully as time allows between these series of strikes. It's very wasteful to begin these attacks when you only have partial Stamina. Also, spending time waiting for Stamina when you're within the boss' striking distance is incredibly dangerous.

Though Vordt can't close gaps instantly, he is still capable of charging over open terrain. If you see him lower and fix on your position, be ready to roll. You won't be able to outsprint him during these charges, so stand still and put all of your attention into the coming dodge. When he passes, turn and walk after him so that you have full Stamina when you get to his new position.

STAGE II

At very close to half health, Vordt glows with a strange fog. Get free shots while you can during this brief transition, and then back off to range once again. Vordt has more attacks during this portion of the fight, including several small, faster strikes. If you aren't comfortable with your health pool and/or your dodging techniques, you may want to go back to a shield so that you can block the smaller blows (while still relying on dodge for the bigger windups).

Often, rolling directly underneath Vordt works well for avoiding his big attacks. He'll flop onto you if you stay down there long, but as a short-term solution, it's very effective.

It's too early in the game to have much gear for high Resistances, but in future New Game Plus runs through Dark Souls III, you should keep your Frost Resistance as high as possible when killing Vordt. This prevents you from getting frostbite.

Kill Vordt. Once he is dispatched, you can use the banner that you received in the church. Take the banner to the far end of the road. Interact with the road when you've gone far enough, and watch a short scene as you are taken to Undead Settlement. This is the next step in your journey.

Greirat

After you've cleared this region by killing Vordt, warp to the Tower on the Wall Bonfire again. Descend to the bottom of that tower. Fight through smaller groups of undead as you look for a tiny dungeon cell at the end of this area.

The only thing to watch out for is the enemy with Firebombs as you search the bottom part of the tower. Always stand clear of barrels when enemy throw their bombs, because you take major damage if you are hit by exploding barrels!

The Cell Key (from 17) unlocks it, and you meet Greirat. He'll give you a quest to find a woman named Loretta. (You'll learn more about this in the Undead Settlement.) Suffice to say that you receive a Blue Tearstone Ring right now. Additionally, Greirat goes to the Firelink Shrine and becomes a vendor there. He sells higher-quality arrows and bolts compared to the Shrine Handmaid, and his selection varies from hers. There is also a locked door that requires the Lift Chamber Key to open. It's at the bottom of the tower. This is part of a quest that takes you to kill the Darkwraith below the tower. Doing so earns you the Red Eye Orb, allowing you to invade other worlds as frequently as you wish. You get the key from Ringfinger Leonhard, an NPC that shows up occasionally in the Firelink Shrine.

STAGE I

Initially, you must destroy several large clusters of explosive. The edges of the Spirit Orb as well as any of its attacks damage both bosses, but remember you'll lose some control of the Knight while operating the corresponding Possessed Object. The Knight will also take damage from the explosions, so be careful not to get caught in the blast radius of the Possessed Object you drop near them.

Secondly, not to Treasure Hoarders that you must eliminate when they appear! Lure, but your focus is on the Ent.

The Curse-rotted Greatwood has a few ways to attack. Its most common is a ground slam, but it can also summon a few Treasure Hoarders to help it out. Finally, it has a powerful charge attack that can hit you from anywhere on the map.

Its other set of moves focus you in on the Ent. Its main two methods are a wide sweeping attack:

And a tight spin attack:

As mentioned, also watch for Transportation Orbs and the Rune of the Rooted Greatwood. Take the latter back to the Rooted Greatwood's Rune Altar to summon a Treasure Hoarder. Remember to keep your distance from the Ent's attacks.

Whether to take Orbs of Fortune, Valkyrie, Lunge, standing at the center of the boss room has the benefit to expose the Ent's attacks to you, but it also makes it harder to avoid the Treasure Hoarders' attacks. Standing near the edge of the boss room makes it easier to avoid the Treasure Hoarders' attacks, but it also makes it harder to see the Ent's attacks.

You can grab some Rotwood Bones and a Warped Rotten Shield in the ground just in front of the arena.

To get the most destruction out of the Possessed Object, equip a Bone Bomb or Explosive Shield. You should never let the Knight die, so continue, because there are very few rocks among the path.

The next stage will be the Ent's arena. It is a circular clearing ringed by Pyromancers. Use a strategically placed explosive to destroy the Rune Altar, giving you a challenge equal to a normal Ent attack.

STAGE II

The Curse-rotted Greatwood is fairly heavy. It has full range, full attack rate, but, to quote you, has an arm to swim through. Its attacks are slow, but they have a lot of power behind them.

It retains a few of its attacks from Stage I, but it also has a few new ones. Its first is a ground slam, but it is longer than you want to stay nearby.

Its other set of moves throw you in the air. Its main two methods are a wide sweeping attack:

And a tight spin attack:

The Ent keeps sniffing out the Knight's scent, and it will summon Treasure Hoarders to help it find you. Watch for the Transportation Orbs and the Rune of the Rooted Greatwood. Take the latter back to the Rune Altar to summon a Treasure Hoarder. Remember to keep your distance from the Ent's attacks.

Whether to take Orbs of Fortune, Valkyrie, Lunge, standing at the center of the boss room has the benefit to expose the Ent's attacks to you, but it also makes it harder to avoid the Treasure Hoarders' attacks. Standing near the edge of the boss room makes it easier to avoid the Treasure Hoarders' attacks, but it also makes it harder to see the Ent's attacks.

You can collect one more Rotwood Bone and Warped Rotten Shield from behind the arena. Also, you will spend a short distance in the Treasure Hoarder Room on entering the boss' Lair.

BOARDING <CLEF> UNDERBOOK

The Pleasure Fortress here acts as a quick defense. The boss mages shoot out some very slow, and fairly easy to dodge, projectiles. Each one has the ability to shoot out a ring of projectiles when it explodes. Watch for the Knight's Ranged Attacks, as they can be used to destroy the projectiles before they reach you.

There is a small circle the generates, and it contains several short-lived fire-based enemies as they approach the Treant Rune Ring, a Rune Altar that will summon a Treant. Treants are slow, but they have a lot of health and can do a lot of damage. Use Orbs of Fortune when you're up against these, or maximize their pain after you've killed the Pleasure Fortress.

Also, you can find a Golden Bone nearby. Next to the Rune Ring is a pillar you can blow up for the sake of pain, and you can also destroy the Rune Ring itself. Finally, there is a Rune Altar that will summon a Treasure Hoarder. Watch for the Transportation Orbs and the Rune of the Rooted Greatwood. Take the latter back to the Rune Altar to summon a Treasure Hoarder. Remember to keep your distance from the Ent's attacks.

Whether to take Orbs of Fortune, Valkyrie, Lunge, standing at the center of the boss room has the benefit to expose the Ent's attacks to you, but it also makes it harder to avoid the Treasure Hoarders' attacks. Standing near the edge of the boss room makes it easier to avoid the Treasure Hoarders' attacks, but it also makes it harder to see the Ent's attacks.

Once the Rune Ent is the ground near Treants. It is immune standing weapon for Pyromancers, but a strategically placed explosive will destroy the Rune Altar just fine, or a well-placed attack to cut it off the pillar.

Boss: Crystal Sage

STAGE I

Initially, the Crystal Sage appears in front of you and uses a handful of spells to attack from range. Although many of these spells can track, skillful dodging is still 100 percent effective in avoiding the attacks.

Sprint forward to close the distance, and dodge only when you have to. Walk the last few feet to start regenerating Stamina before your big combo, and unload on the Crystal Sage. If you've kept up with your weapon upgrades, you can cut off half of the boss' health with one combo.

It's okay if you haven't been pushing a really superior damage build. If that's the case, get several attacks on the boss, and then run back to one of the stone pillars so that you can get your Stamina while maintaining some level of safety. Then, repeat your glorious charge to finish Stage I.

STAGE II

The Crystal Sage gets much smarter for the second half of the battle. It disappears at first and throws a few crystals around the arena. Stay mobile and be watchful.

When the mage returns, it will come up in multiple areas. Most of the images you see are fake, but they can still cast spells. For a crude solution, hit each image once to see if the Crystal Sage takes actual damage. If it does, you're dealing with the real one. Murder it! If not, then the image disappears, and you have one less target to worry about.

The faster way to tell which boss is real is to look for the proper color. The fake bosses use only blue spells. The real Crystal Sage casts purple spells, so it's fairly easy to see where everything is coming from. Track the spells back to their source, and beat this fight quickly.

Do not tarry. This is a fight that gets very difficult if you try to finesse it. Sprint to targets, attack, and either move on if they're fake or kill the Crystal Sage when you find it. Be a brute! It's safer too kill the false sages because their spells do very real damage. If you're having any trouble, take the extra time to kill all of the false sages before attacking the real boss.

After the fight, use the new Bonfire. Your fire burns stronger with each victory.

A path leads out from the Crystal Sage's arena. The path winds here and there, and only a few enemies guard it, two Hollow Manservant and an Evangelist.

There are two Crystal Lizards here, on ledges below you as you leave the Crystal Sage's room, though defeating them before they run away can be tricky.

Remember you can port out and back (or quit and continue) to make them reappear. Both drop Twinkling Titanite, which can be used to upgrade unique soulbound weapons (that is, weapons that are neither normal mundane weaponry nor soul-transposed weapons from Ludleth).

The Herald's Armor Set is on your way. You find it just before reaching the Cathedral of the Deep. Get the Bonfire for that new region, and check on a ledge just below the Bonfire for the Paladin's Ashes, but consider returning to Farron Keep to clear that area before you move on formally into the cathedral.

When you do approach the Ashes, be wary of an Unkindled that is hiding back there. This foe dodges well, has thrown weapons, and can take more than a few hits. If you don't see this side area, that enemy follows you and attacks later on (from behind)!

Boss: Abyss Watchers

STAGE I

The first portion of this fight is a bit of a battle royale against multiple Abyss Watchers. Only one attacks initially, but more of them rise from their slumber throughout the fight. The bad news is that you can be surrounded and overwhelmed, but the good news is that the Abyss Watchers don't play favorites. They'll even attack each other if they can.

Your safest bet is to position the one you're fighting so that it has its back to the majority of the room. That dramatically increases the chance that the other combatants will focus on your enemy instead of on you.

In terms of attacks, the Abyss Watchers have wide sweeps and good lunges. Dodge multiple times when you're avoiding their short-range combo slashes, or make one late dodge when they charge forward to reach you.

This stage lasts for the Abyss Watchers' entire health bar.

STAGE II

After you defeat the main horde, a single foe rises. This one is going to be much tougher than the foes you were already attacking. Its sword is alight with flame, and the boss can backstep quite well to keep your combos from being as effective.

Bait the boss' long-range attacks because they're easier to dodge. Use this to get distance, dodge, and heal whenever you need a sip from your Estus Flask. Don't try to heal when you're up close, as it won't end in your favor. Even doing this at range is reckless if the boss hasn't already missed because it can approach you very quickly.

Long combinations aren't very doable. Let the boss have its dodges. Move in close afterward, and get one or two hits (which is all you can really hope for).

The biggest problem in this stage is the fire trail that the boss leaves behind. If you move anywhere that the boss has recently been during its attacks, you are going to take damage. Always move or roll to the side to avoid getting hit. The fire can even interrupt your attacks, so it's a massive problem.

Finish the battle, and catch your breath. You've just defeated one of the Lords of Cinder!

Overview

Welcome to the first chapter of our walkthrough for Abyssal Descent. This chapter will guide you through the initial stages of the game, where you'll learn the basics of combat, exploration, and puzzle-solving. We'll also introduce you to the game's unique mechanics and help you get acquainted with the world of Abyssal Descent.

Collectibles

Collectibles are scattered throughout the game, and finding them all can be a challenge. We'll provide you with a list of all the collectibles in this chapter, along with their locations and descriptions. Some collectibles are hidden in plain sight, while others require you to solve puzzles or defeat enemies to obtain them.

Achievements

Achievements are a great way to track your progress and challenge yourself to complete certain tasks. We'll list all the achievements in this chapter, along with their requirements and tips on how to unlock them. Some achievements are easy to obtain, while others require you to complete the game on a higher difficulty level or to find all the collectibles.

Trophies

Trophies are similar to achievements, but they're specific to the PlayStation platform. We'll list all the trophies in this chapter, along with their requirements and tips on how to unlock them. Some trophies are easy to obtain, while others require you to complete the game on a higher difficulty level or to find all the collectibles.

Weapon Upgrades

Weapon upgrades are an important part of the game, and we'll provide you with a list of all the weapon upgrades in this chapter, along with their locations and descriptions. Some weapon upgrades are hidden in plain sight, while others require you to solve puzzles or defeat enemies to obtain them.

Enemy Guide

The enemy guide will help you learn about the different enemies you'll encounter in the game, including their strengths and weaknesses. We'll provide you with a list of all the enemies in this chapter, along with their descriptions and tips on how to defeat them. Some enemies are easy to defeat, while others require you to use specific strategies or weapons.

Boss Guide

The boss guide will help you learn about the different bosses you'll encounter in the game, including their strengths and weaknesses. We'll provide you with a list of all the bosses in this chapter, along with their descriptions and tips on how to defeat them. Some bosses are easy to defeat, while others require you to use specific strategies or weapons.

Puzzle Guide

The puzzle guide will help you learn about the different puzzles you'll encounter in the game, including their solutions and tips on how to solve them. We'll provide you with a list of all the puzzles in this chapter, along with their descriptions and tips on how to solve them. Some puzzles are easy to solve, while others require you to use specific strategies or items.

Multiplayer Guide

The multiplayer guide will help you learn about the different multiplayer modes in the game, including their rules and tips on how to play them. We'll provide you with a list of all the multiplayer modes in this chapter, along with their descriptions and tips on how to play them. Some multiplayer modes are easy to play, while others require you to use specific strategies or weapons.

Tips and Tricks

The tips and tricks section will help you learn about the different tips and tricks you can use to improve your gameplay, including how to use the environment to your advantage and how to avoid enemy attacks. We'll provide you with a list of all the tips and tricks in this chapter, along with their descriptions and tips on how to use them. Some tips and tricks are easy to use, while others require you to practice and develop your skills.

Frequently Asked Questions

The frequently asked questions section will help you learn about the most common questions players have about the game, including how to get started and how to progress through the game. We'll provide you with a list of all the frequently asked questions in this chapter, along with their answers and tips on how to find more information. Some questions are easy to answer, while others require you to do some research or ask for help.

Version History

The version history section will help you learn about the different versions of the game, including the changes and updates that have been made. We'll provide you with a list of all the versions in this chapter, along with their descriptions and tips on how to find more information. Some versions are easy to find, while others require you to do some research or ask for help.

Walkthrough

Boss: Deacons of the Deep

STAGE I

The first stage of this battle becomes significantly easier once you understand its mechanics. There are a multitude of Deacons of the Deep in the area, and the “boss” doesn’t take any damage when you hurt or even kill them. Instead, you have to kill the Deacon of the Deep that is glowing red to deal any permanent damage to your enemy. You can kill the other targets temporarily, but they’ll return shortly.

Thus, rush for the glowing Deacon of the Deep, hack it apart, and then back off so that you can spot the red light descending on the next active Deacon of the Deep. Enemy damage output is minor, so you are going to be fine as long as you have a couple of flasks to spare throughout the fight.

STAGE II

After you get the boss to half health, the light recedes once again. It returns as a new challenger is summoned. This is the Archdeacon, and he’ll be surrounded by a few tougher Deacons of the Deep in blue. As before, you can only deal lasting damage by hurting the glowing target. This time, you won’t have to shift your focus. Archdeacon Royce is the real enemy, and his death ends the battle.

Use extremely long combos to deal maximum damage. These adversaries can’t interrupt you very well, nor can they outdo your damage output. Make this a battle of extended trades. Combo hard, back off, heal, and repeat. This isn’t a time for finesse.

Use the Bonfire that appears after the fight, and loot the Archdeacon Armor Set from a body on the floor. You’re now finished in the cathedral. Proceed to the Catacombs of Carthus. If you’ve beaten that area already, make your way over to Irithyll instead.

Walkthrough

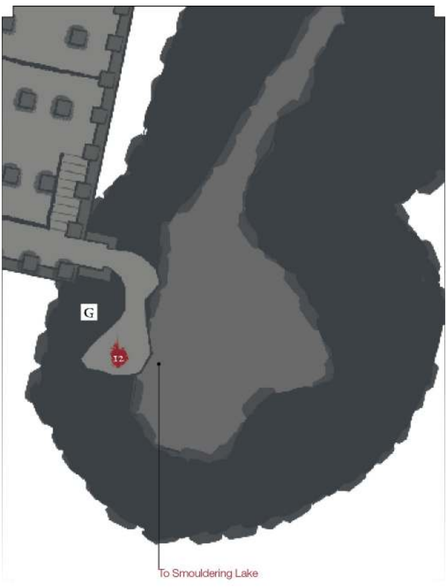
Boss: High Lord Wolnir



To win this fight, you need to destroy Wolnir's bracelets. Wolnir has these bracelets at the end of his bony arms, and they shine with golden light. It's pretty clear what you need to hit!

Wolnir can strike you directly with his arms. He also emits a cloud of death that surrounds everything near his body. Dodge well after he raises whichever arm is closer to you. It's not too difficult to avoid these attacks.

The cloud of death is more dangerous, though, as Wolnir moves around. It's not fast, but you can still find yourself closer to the body than you expected. The damage output from this is very scary, and it's an area of effect. If you start taking damage, roll away from Wolnir, and then sprint until you're far enough away to be safe. Then, you can heal and get back into things.

If you're too far away from the edge of the death cloud, it is possible to heal through it using multiple flasks. This is not ideal, but it can save your life if you get out of position. Avoid that by wait for Wolnir to put his arms near you. Don't chase them!

Skeletons also spawn during the fight, though they're a minor problem compared to Wolnir himself. Break all three bracelets, and finish the encounter. It's a quick one.

After you have destroyed the boss, you find a Bonfire and the route out to Irithyll. It's up to you whether to cut the bridge behind you and descend farther into the region, or to move forward toward Irithyll.

Major Battle

Attack the bridge at (10) a single time, and wait for it to break. Make sure that your health is full so that the coming fall doesn't kill you. The bridge breaks after a few seconds, and then you have a good plunge. Stay near the halfway point of the bridge as it breaks. If you're too close to the wall, you actually end up falling farther.

You can climb up the damaged bridge from the bottom, and that is another reason why it's smart to kill the boss before coming down here (you get a Bonfire that is only a few moments from the top of the bridge).

Make sure that you are ready to tackle this area when you come back. A Demon blocks your way to the next Bonfire. It fights like the one back at the Undead Settlement, though this Demon has much more health and damage output. Fire Resistance gives you an advantage in this fight.

Roll around the large Demon to get free strikes at its flanks. Though it takes a number of hits to kill, you almost always get multiple swings every time the massive monster misses an attack. In this battle, dodging is far better than shield use.

From here, it's a dead shot into the Smouldering Lake; you can't miss it. Before you continue, make sure that you've gotten the Soul of a Demon from the mini boss, the Old Sage's Blindfold and Witch's Ring from a cubby before the Bonfire, and the Black Blade from a Mimic in the Demon's room.

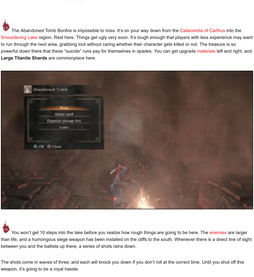
Bonfire—Abandoned Tomb



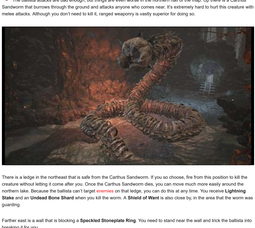
The Abandoned Tomb Bonfire is impossible to miss. It's on your way down from the Catacombs of Carthus into the Smouldering Lake region. Rest here. Things get ugly very soon. It's tough enough that players with less experience may want to run through the next area, grabbing loot without caring whether their character gets killed or not. The treasure is so powerful down there that these "suicide" runs pay for themselves in spades. You can get upgrade materials left and right, and Large Titanite Shards are commonplace here.

You won't get 10 steps into the lake before you realize how rough things are going to be here. The enemies are larger than life, and a humongous siege weapon has been installed on the cliffs to the south. Whenever there is a direct line of sight between you and the ballista up there, a series of shots rains down.

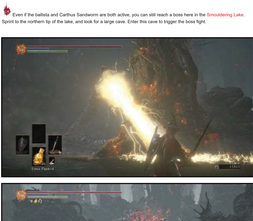
The shots come in waves of three, and each will knock you down if you don't roll at the correct time. Until you shut off this weapon, it's going to be a royal hassle.

Great Crabs are a common sight as you try to pick up the treasure that has been left all over the lake. Roll away from them and sprint to safety. Once the ballista is down, it's okay to fight the Great Crabs. Even then, use a ranged weapon to pull them away from each other so that you can kill them individually.

A narrow tunnel leaves the main room; look for this in the southwest. Along your way, kill both of the Crystal Lizards. There is more treasure in the cavern you reach, but beware. Horace the Hushed is present. If you've been following Ann's line, this NPC will be here, attacking anyone who gets close to him. Read "A Few May Help You on Your Path" to learn more, because this NPC questline is very complex.



Major Battle



The ballista attacks are bad enough, but things are even worse in the northern half of the map. Up there is a Carthus Sandworm that burrows through the ground and attacks anyone who comes near. It's extremely hard to hurt this creature with melee attacks. Although you don't need to kill it, ranged weaponry is vastly superior for doing so.

There is a ledge in the northeast that is safe from the Carthus Sandworm. If you so choose, fire from this position to kill the creature without letting it come after you. Once the Carthus Sandworm dies, you can move much more easily around the northern lake. Because the ballista can't target enemies on that ledge, you can do this at any time. You receive Lightning Stake and an Undead Bone Shard when you kill the worm. A Shield of Want is also close by, in the area that the worm was guarding.

Farther east is a wall that is blocking a Speckled Stoneplate Ring. You need to stand near the wall and trick the ballista into breaking it for you.

That same ledge also ushers you into another section of this region. It leads toward another Bonfire, the ballista (which can be turned off), and plenty of treasure. The path is winding and dangerous, so go here only when you're ready.

Major Battle

Even if the ballista and Carthus Sandworm are both active, you can still reach a boss here in the Smouldering Lake. Sprint to the northern tip of the lake, and look for a large cave. Enter this cave to trigger the boss fight.

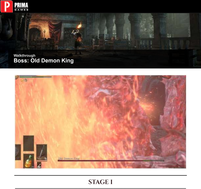
Boss: Old Demon King



STAGE I

The Old Demon King is another fire-based enemy. Pump up your Physical and Fire Resistance as much as you can before the encounter. Use a benchwarp weapon because your shield won't be of any great use. Be more emphasi lasting attacks and heavy swings, and neither is usually safe to block.

Stay away from the creature's mouth. Its fire attacks generate heat, and you can often roll under the boss or to its side to get out of the way when you see it rear back to trigger a breath attack. Sometimes it's useful to back away and then rush the Old Demon King's lower guard and breath weapon because you can dodge closer and get free hits for a short time.

His arm swing is more aggressive than his head swing. You usually have time to dodge backward and you can easily roll yourself by dodging with the circle movement instead of using forward roll.

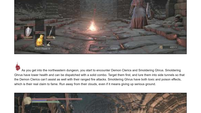
The overhit lighting and good condition of the early fight becomes a frantic damage-fueled interaction the two of you. Trade blows when you can just to burn down the boss before it overpowers your supplies. Its before though. Its tail is a weak spot and makes a very sensible target when you get around the boss. Don't stay in front of him for any reason.

Kill the boss, and then fight its Bonfire.

STAGE II

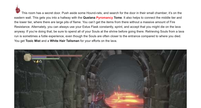
In the second half, the Old Demon King decides to use way more magic. Pyromancy spells of legendary fury and power explode around you. The damage is survivable, but you must dodge and heal often because it's very hard to totally avoid getting hit by the boss's magic attacks. Use the Flame Stoneplate Ring to increase your Fire Resistance substantially and you can easily tell yourself by dodging with the circle movement instead of using forward roll.

The overhit lighting and good condition of the early fight becomes a frantic damage-fueled interaction the two of you. Trade blows when you can just to burn down the boss before it overpowers your supplies. Its before though. Its tail is a weak spot and makes a very sensible target when you get around the boss. Don't stay in front of him for any reason.



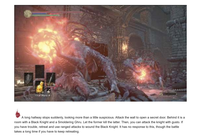
Kill the boss, and then fight its Bonfire.

Bonfire—Old King's Antechamber



Another Bonfire is inside the cave at the north end of this lake. Get this where you're preparing for the Old Demon King fight, or if you're worried about taking on the Curtsy Swordsmen.

As you get into the northwestern dungeon, you start to encounter Demon Clerics and Smoldering Ghosts. Smoldering Ghosts have better health and can be dispatched with a solid combo. Target them first, and run them into side tunnels so that the Demon Clerics can't assist as well with their ranged fire attacks. Smoldering Ghosts have both toxic and poison effects, which is their real claim to fame. Run away from their clouds, even if it means giving up serious ground.



Wriithing Rotten Flesh and Bowbabes are on the western side of the room. Neither foe is a big threat because you're dealt with these enemies before. If you come back toward this area from the southern side, you can secure an Estus Shard from this section, however, that requires a long and twisting detour.

The room has a secret door. Push aside some hound-rats, and search for the door in their small chamber. It's on the eastern wall. This gets you into a hallway with the Quickie Pyromancy Tome. A very helpful to connect the middle two and the lower two, where there are large pits of flame. You can't get the tome from there without a massive amount of Fire Resistance, but you can get it from the upper section of the area. Run down the hall, and then jump off the ledge into the grassy. If you're doing that, be sure to spend all of your Souls at the stone before going there. Retrieving those that is time run is sometimes a futile experience, even though the Souls are often closer to the entrance compared to where you died. You get Tasty Meat and a White Hair Talisman for your efforts on the way.

The open chamber has two Demon Clerics. They'll support each other with melee attacks and ranged fireballs, so they're a tough tweak. Pick away on one of them when you've an angle to either or both. Once isolated, the other one poses no threat. It's worth killing these two because they have very nice treasure behind their warding spells: An unlabeled Ember Shard!

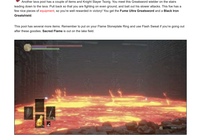
Going halfway stops suddenly, looking more than a little suspicious. Attack the wall to open a secret door. Behind it is a room with a Black Knight and a Smoldering Ghost. Let the former kill the latter. Then you can attack the knight with gusto. If you're feeling particularly brave, you can also try to assist the Black Knight. There is response to this, though the subtle takes a long time if you have to keep reloading.

Once you've beaten your adversary, search the room for the Black Knight Sword. Black Knight weapons deal 20% more damage against Demons, useful in the next Dr Nine Game. Or you also receive a Flame Stoneplate Ring+0 in this chamber.

Smoldering Ghosts proliferate this room and its treasure. Watch the sides of the room as you come in. It's easy to focus on the enemy in front of you and miss the more dangerous ones that have a flanking position. The tasklit Pyromancy Tome is in the room.

There are two ways to get down to the lowest tier of the dungeon. You can drop through the pit on the eastern side of the middle tier, or you can go through the boss door. The latter is the safer option, but it's also the more time-consuming one. Either way, be sure to take battery saves as you go.

First off, there is a multitude of hound-rats. You can be overwhelmed and start interrupted until you're dead if you keep down and don't have a good weapon swing to arrange it enough Fires to fend off the attackers. More dangerous is the pack of Bowbabes below. So carefully rush to rush into them melee.



Look for a pair of sword stuck on the western edge of the cornice. A dead is scratchered inside of them, and it has a distinction inside. Grass Large Titanite Shards. The real prize is behind the second sword: the Icelith Staff.

Another boss pool has a couple of items and Knight Slayer Tsurug. You meet the Greatsword soldier on the stairs leading down to the lane.Pull back so that you are fighting on even ground, and bail out for slower attacks. This foe has a Pyromancy and Miracle, so you're well-resistant to victory! You get the Fume Ultra Greatsword and a Black Iron Greatshield.

This pool has several more items. Remember to pick up your Flame Stoneplate Ring and use Flash Sweat if you're going out after those puddles. Sacred Flame is out on the dock field.

You finally reach the end of the dungeon. A lonely Black Knight guards the bridge that takes you out of the area. It leads to a tasklit, and up toward the ballista's platform. Skeleton Wheels, Skeletons, and Skeleton Swordsmen are on the ledges above the bridge. Use your ranged weapons to clear them out before you go. Then, grab the Legendary Ashen Bow you climb the ladders up to the top. A small dragon has the body and you can safely drop down to get it.

The ballista is at the very top of the hill. Use the crank beneath it to drop the weapon from firing ever again. This allows you to search the entirety of the Smouldering Lake without the constant threat of knockdowns and free damage. There is a fast way to get to the ballista, but it's very dangerous. Run down the hill, and then jump off a homeward Bone to bank up without wasting time. Do that Game 2 if, there is a Bloodtinge Ring+1 near the ballista.

Remember you need the ballista activated to break the wall in the Speckled Stoneplate Ring, so you should try to grab this early before running up here and deactivating the ballista.

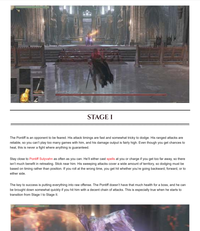
Boss: Pontiff Sulyvahn

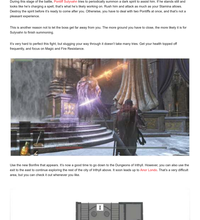


STAGE I

The Pontiff's an opponent to be feared. His attack timings are fast and somewhat tricky to dodge. His ranged attacks are deceptively powerful, and his melee attacks can deal the damage output of a fairly high. Even though you get chances to heal, this is never a fight where anything is guaranteed.

Stay close to Pontiff Sulyvahn and often as you can. He'll either cast spells at you or charge if you get too far away, so there isn't much benefit in retreating. Stick near him. His sweeping attacks cover a wide amount of territory, so dodging must be based on timing rather than position. If you roll at the wrong time, you get hit whether you're going backward, forward, or to either side.

The key to success is putting everything into raw offense. The Pontiff doesn't have that much health for a boss, and he can be brought down somewhat quickly if you hit him with a decent chain of attacks. This is especially true when he seeks to transition from Stage I to Stage II.



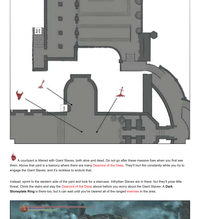
STAGE II

The boss collapses when he starts his transition into the new phase. Do not back off here—close in, and take free shots. Get as many hits in as you can while he's down. He'll get back up quickly, and then he rises again. The second stage is fairly tough, and every hit that you get now brings you that much closer to victory.

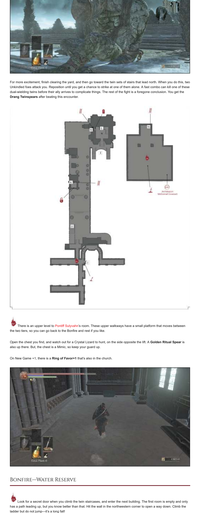
During this stage of the battle, Pontiff Sulyvahn tries to periodically summon a dark spirit to assist him. If he stands still and looks like he's charging a spell, that's what he's likely working on. Rush him and attack as much as your Stamina allows when he's doing this, and he's easy to come after you. Otherwise, you have to deal with two Pontiffs at once, and that's not a pleasant experience.

This is another reason not to let the boss get far away from you. The more ground you have to close, the more likely it is for Sulyvahn to finish summoning.

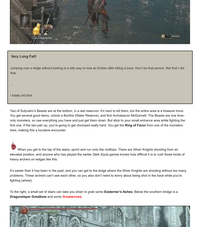
It's very hard to perfect this fight, but slugging your way through it doesn't take many tries. Get your health topped off frequently, and focus on Magic and Fire Resistance.



Use the new Bonfire that appears. It's now a good time to go down to the Dungeons of Irithyll. However, you can also use the exit to the east to continue exploring the rest of the city of Irithyll above. It even leads up to Aldrich Castle. That's a very difficult area, but you can check it out whenever you like.



Sulyvahn's Beast with Dark Stones, both alive and dead. Do not go after these massive foes when you first see them. Instead, head to the eastern side of the pool and look for a staircase. Irithyllan Slaves are in there, but they're poor little threat. Climb the stairs and slay the Swarms of the Deep above before you worry about the Dark Stones. A Dark Stonesplate Ring is there too, but it can wait until you've cleared all of the ranged enemies in the area.



For more excitement, finish clearing the yard, and then go toward the twin sets of stairs that lead north. When you do this, two Irithyllan Slaves attack you. Be prepared to get a chance to strike at one of them alone. A few combo can kill one of these dual-wielding fiends before their ally can reach attackable range. The rest of the fight is a foregone conclusion. You get the Dung Pemmycane after beating the encounter.

There is an upper level to Pontiff Sulyvahn's room. These upper walkways have a small platform that moves between the two floors, so you can go back to the Bonfire and reset if you like.

Open the chest you find, and watch out for a Crystal Lizard to hunt, on the side opposite the lift. A Golden Ritual Spear is also up there. Run the chest a a Mimic, so keep your guard up.

On New Game+1, there is a Ring of Favor+1 that's also in the chunk.

Bonfire—Water Reserve

Look for a secret door when you climb the twin staircases, and enter the next building. The first room is empty and only has a path leading up, but you know better than that. Hit the wall in the northwestern corner to open a way down. Climb the ladder but do not jump—it's a long fall!

Very Long Fall!

Jumping over a ledge without looking is a silly way to lose an Ember after killing a boss. Don't be that person. Not that I did that.

I totally did that.

Two of Sulyvahn's Beasts are at the bottom, in a sad reservoir. It's hard to kill them, but the entire area is a treasure trove. You get several good items, unlock a Bonfire (Water Reserve), and find Ambassador McDonnell. The Beasts are one time encounters, so you can't respawn them and can't get them down. But climb to your west entrance area after fighting the first one. If the two pair up, you're going to get chomped really hard. You get the Ring of Favor from one of the monsters here, making this a lucrative area.

When you get to the top of the stairs, sprint and run onto the rooftops. There are Silver Knights shooting from an elevated position, and anyone who has played the earlier Dark Souls games knows how difficult it is to rush these kinds of enemy archers non-stop.

It's easier than it has been in the past, and you can get to the bridge where the Silver Knights are shooting without too many hits. Watch out for the two that are next either, so you don't don't need to worry about being shot in the back while you're fighting ahead.

To the right, a small set of stairs can take you down to grab some Eastern's Ashes. Below the southern bridge is a Dragonslayer Greatbow and some Greatarrows.

Right one more Silver Knight on a lower ledge. A sharpot roof leads down toward a bridge. Take that to open a shortcut between the area and the Descent of the Deacons of the Deep. When you're coming back up, hop off of that sharpot roof to find some equipment underneath the precarious walkway.

Bonfire—Prison Tower

A small room goes out toward a church-type tower. If you strike the wall on your right, a large sculpture of a knight disappears, and a new path is revealed. You find the Brass Armor Set and an intriguing room down that way. And to low can lead you to the Sword of Avowal along the hard hallway and a Chameleon spell when you return. Inside the final room, you find the Dragonslayer Greatbow and a Revenant Ring (from a small cubby to the right). Only the ring is there if you go without following Aldi's quest.

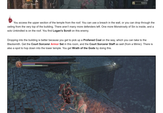
Pilgrims Have Sign From (Requires Deathfire)

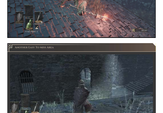
A damaged bridge connects Infidel Imperium and the Profaned Capital. As you try to cross it, a Heartless Gargoyle appears and destroys the bridge behind you. Defeat the Gargoyle and then head through the tunnel ahead, avoiding any arrow storms you're doing. It's better to take a hit than fall to your death. Or you can simply dash beyond it and fight it once you reach stable footing.

Climb up the Profaned Capital, and climb onto a broken floor in the tower. Light a Bonfire (Profaned Capital) and then head around the Undead Bone Shard. You also meet the Shrine's Orb gesture and now you can just go here.

Don't try to fall down to the treasure in one of the windows. You actually get it from outside the tower, where a ladder leads up to it. On the southern side of the big circle, you get a Major Soulstream Ring if you're searching in New Game.

Take out of the tower's broken wall to explore the eastern side of the capital. Through cathedral, there is more loot to be had (see below), and some of it is quite important. You should cause that other path you saw from the Bonfire, and make those your next destination.





Beyond the A-level dodge, Purple Bone Clumps and some other things go for it. To explore the far edges of the rim, you're likely to lose out on the amount of damage that the boss effect, but it's still worthwhile.

The small northern room has a Cursebite Ring inside of it. On New Game +1, you can find a Flame Stoneplate Ring+1 in the chest in the southern room.

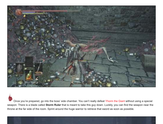
The back part of the nave beyond has three Mimickeets of three hands of it. These thick creatures move slowly, but they have a lot of health and can deal out some serious damage. Use your Ranged Weapons to take them down, and then head around the back to the stairwell. Don't be greedy, back off after them the spin attack you use. It takes time to reset them, and you don't want to be caught in the middle of a group of them. Be careful, and you'll be fine.

The double fire spear section of the tornado from this roof. You can use a forward or the wall, or you can drop through the hole in the floor to the left of the Bonfire. Either way, you'll land on the ground floor. Head around the corner, and you immediately run into the exit. You find Logan's Scroll on the journey.

Dropping into the building is better because you get to pick up a Profaned Coal on the way, which you can take to the Blacksmith. Get the Dual Swords behind the Blacksmith and the Dual Swords Staff as well (from a library). There is also a spot to buy loot into the lower temple. You'll get Wrath of the Gods by doing this.

While you don't have the ring, you'll find a Profaned Capital Ring in the corner. Get it and then head around the back of the building. You'll find a Profaned Capital Ring in the corner. Get it and then head around the back of the building.

Outside of it mixed with the Greatsteel Gold Serpent Ring. This is one of the most beautiful Rune for people who don't have the Ring of Steel Protection. It's also a great way to get a lot of Souls, as it's a Rune that you can use to get a lot of Souls. Head forward and go under you're clattering bones, and then sweep them out the lower portion before heading back to the Bonfire.



A ladder will take you pretty back into the central area of the Profaned Capital. Otherwise, take the stairs that lead up and out of the capital. The returns you to Infidel Imperium, by the Giant Dead. You find the Jailer's Key Ring there. You can't open the door to the Jailer's Cell yet, but you can open the door to the Undead Dungeon. It's much like the Bull on your way to the Undead Burg, but it's smaller this time around. You'll find a Cursebite Ring and Estus Shard in the chest and a Cursebite Wrist Wraps+1 if you search in New Game +1.

The Headless Greatsword and a legion of Jailer Heartlessly are in the hallway that explores the lower room. The fighting here is essentially tough at first, especially if you get overly targeted at once.

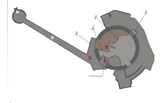
Jailer Heartlessly have slow ranged attacks. Dodge underneath their fireballs, and also the melee spear. They are still lethal at close range if you take too long to kill each one, so sit and feel if you experience any problems. Don't take them, and don't hesitate.

Pick away at them from the upper doorway if you can. Or, drop the group down to the stairs, use Plunging Attacks to burn them down, and then retreat your stomach if necessary.

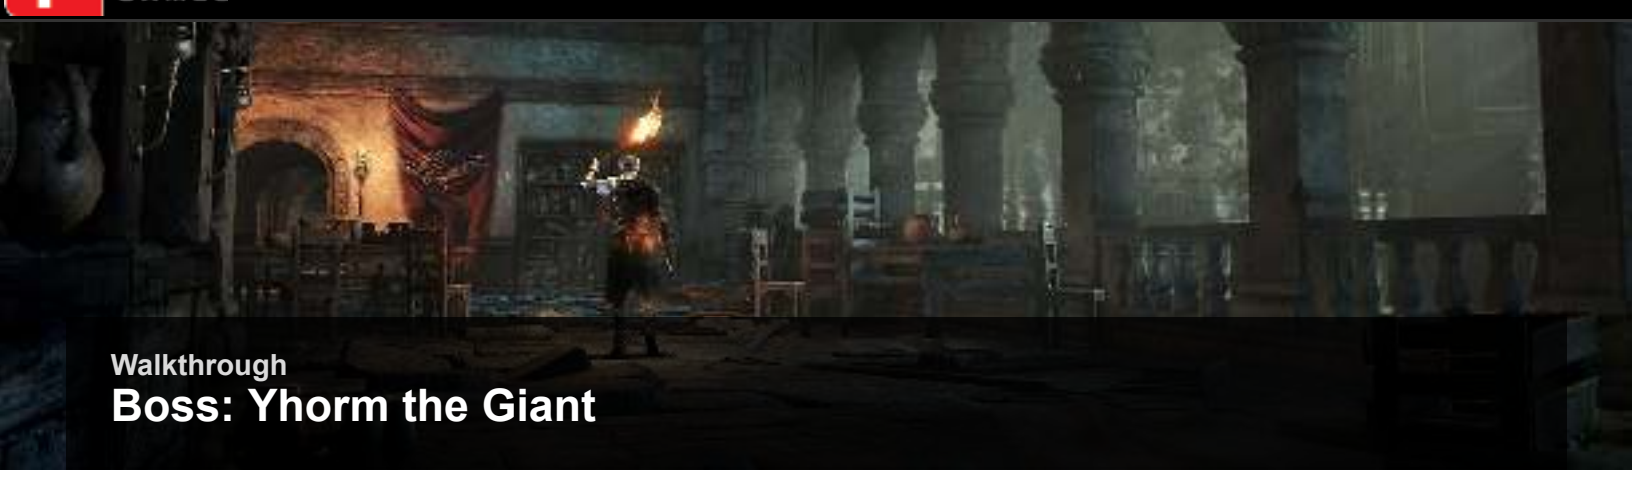
If you're having trouble with the Jailer Heartlessly, you can also jump on a Cursebite Ring to give yourself a bit more time to heal. Use the Ring to heal, and then head down the stairs to the Jailers to take them out one by one.

Don't rush the Jailers in the hallway. Attack one into Melee by directly next to each other. You find a Greatshield of Glory inside one of the rooms.

After you're prepared, go into the boss' main chamber. You can't really deliver Hands-On Combat without using a Ranged Weapon, so you'll have to use your Bow or Crossbow to do this one. Stay back and keep your Ranged Hand Weapon out for the duration of the fight. Sprint around the huge space to maintain that same as much as possible.



If you're new, use a Greenward Bond to pull back to use Bonfire and equip the weapon while you're safe. Or, take a chance and roll that sword to close by the fight. It's possible to do this without taking a hit, and even if you do get clattered, you can heal up and get back in the fight. Just be careful. Don't rush, and you'll be fine. The goal is to maintain touch and stay active by playing around the giant spinning blades.



Walkthrough

Boss: Yhorm the Giant

Though Yhorm has two stages (like many bosses), they aren't that relevant once you understand the mechanics of the battle. Storm Ruler is the key to everything. You can't deal real damage without it, and even its regular attacks aren't of any substantial value.

Instead, you charge the weapon (see the Controlling the Game chapter for details). Wait until the wind around the blade starts to burst with energy. Then, use your charged heavy attack to bring Yhorm the Giant to his knees. It only takes a few swings like that to silence him forever.

That's the short version.

But Yhorm won't take this lying down. He'll still try to rip you in half with his humongous blade. He can destroy the pillars in the room, so you can't count on them for cover. It's safer to stand in the open and use dodge to get out of the way at the last minute. Yhorm telegraphs his attacks from across the room, so you always know when one of them is coming.

It's okay to interrupt your Storm Ruler charging to dodge. In fact, it would be foolish not to. Yhorm has a long recovery time from his attacks, and he'll be very vulnerable after each one. Don't rush! This is a quick fight, even if you're defensive.

With Yhorm dead, you've finished with the Profaned Capital (and the entire Irithyll Dungeon section of the game). You should now look into Anor Londo, at the far end of Irithyll. Or, you can start clearing out Lothric Castle, which is discussed in its own chapter.

Poison Abounds

You should watch the statues throughout the cathedral carefully. Many of them dispense poison that lingers in the area for a few moments. Sprint through these clouds to minimize your exposure.

Treasure That Bites

If you try to open this chest, it attacks you and deals high damage. This foe is a Mimic. Swing at the chest to damage it and get the drop on the nasty creature.

The Pilgrim

If you've been following Anri's questline carefully up to this point, you can meet the mysterious Londor Pilgrim down the steps here, and your bride (or groom!) to be farther down the hall.

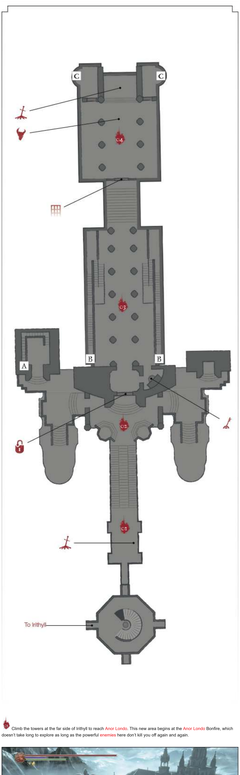
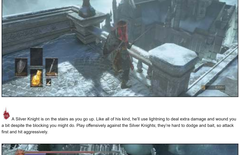
Bonfire—Anor Londo



Climb the towers at the far side of Irithyll to reach Anor Londo. This new area begins at the Anor Londo Bonfire, which doesn't take long to explore as long as the powerful enemies here don't kill you off again and again.



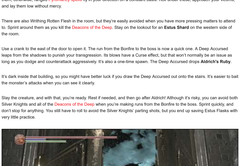
A Silver Knight is on the stairs as you go up. Like all of his kind, he'll use lightning to deal extra damage and wound you a bit despite the blocking you might do. Play offensively against the Silver Knights, they're hard to dodge and bait, so attack first and hit aggressively.

A second one comes down the stairs a little while after you engage his comrade. If at all possible, go crazy on the initial knight so that you can kill or badly wound him before he gets support from his ally.

To the east, there is another pair of Silver Knights. Shoot at range to soften them, and focus your damage on one of them specifically if you end up in battle with both. The sooner one goes down, the sooner this becomes a manageable fight.

You can't get into the central building initially. The path to the west wraps around the area and lets you get inside. After that, you can unlock the door and go back and forth at your leisure.

A lone Silver Knight patrols the western walkways. Pull him from range, and dispatch him. The building he's guarding has the Giant's Coal inside, so you gain another upgrade for the Blacksmith. When you're inside, take the stairs up so that you can get into the main building.



Deacons of the Deep are on the walkways and the main floor of the central building. To have any peace, you need to kill them; otherwise, ranged Pyromancy spells fly in your direction on a constant basis. Roll under these, approach your victims, and lay them low without mercy.

There are also Writhing Rotten Flesh in the room, but they're easily avoided when you have more pressing matters to attend to. Sprint around them as you kill the Deacons of the Deep. Stay on the lookout for an Estus Shard on the western side of the room.

Use a crank to the east of the door to open it. The run from the Bonfire to the boss is now a quick one. A Deep Accursed leaps from the shadows to punish your transgression. Its blows have a Curse effect, but that won't normally be an issue as long as you dodge and counterattack aggressively. It's also a one-time spawn. The Deep Accursed drops Aldrich's Ruby.

It's dark inside that building, so you might have better luck if you draw the Deep Accursed out onto the stairs. It's easier to bait the monsters's attacks when you can see it clearly.

Slay the creature, and with that, you're ready. Rest if needed, and then go after Aldrich! Although it's risky, you can avoid both Silver Knights and all of the Deacons of the Deep when you're making runs from the Bonfire to the boss. Sprint quickly, and don't stop for anything. You still have to roll to avoid the Silver Knights' parting shots, but you end up saving Estus Flasks with very little practice.

The fight against Aldrich begins almost instantly, as you enter the fog gate and are beset by this dedicated spellcaster. This is what it means to face off against someone who has really mastered the ancient arts of sorcery. If you've finished the fight and have pursued Leonhard's quest line, return here after your victory. Use the Black Eye Orb to invade Leonhard. For doing all of this, you find the Sun Princess Ring, Soul of Rosaria, the Crescent Moon Sword, and a Silver Mask.

Walkthrough

Boss: Aldrich, Devourer of Gods

Killing Aldrich is the easy part; surviving Aldrich's spells long enough to finish the job is what makes your task difficult. All of Aldrich's attacks deal high damage, so it's worth pulling out your Estus Flask whenever you get hit. Beyond that, this fight is all about learning how to avoid the spells well enough so that they don't kill you outright.

The bolt that Aldrich casts is fast, has long range, and is hard to dodge. However, this spell isn't used as much if you stay at close or medium range with Aldrich. That's sensible anyway, since this is not a boss that you want to trade ranged attacks against.

It's even harder to dodge all of the small motes of Arcane energy that Aldrich summons. They'll rise as a group of eight, and then they'll individually go after you. They don't do tons of damage per hit, but you're going to waste a lot of Stamina if you want to avoid all of them. The most efficient defense is to roll under the motes and get closer to Aldrich. Absorb a couple of hits so that you arrive at the caster with most of your Stamina ready to use. As long as you're evading the majority of the motes, you should be in good shape for reprisal.

Aldrich can knock you down and do some damage if you're at point-blank range. Accept this, because that's the place where you inflict the most damage on him. He knocks you down as he's beginning to teleport to another location. That means that he won't attack for several moments, allowing you time to heal and start repositioning yourself. Aim for the farthest corner of the room, which is likely where he'll pop up again.

When in just the right mood, Aldrich charges for a big swing of his scythe and then hits everything around him. It's real damage, and you most certainly want to dodge it. The good news is that you might go an entire fight with him without seeing this bigger melee attack happen.

Unfortunately, you will see Aldrich rely on his best attack much more often. After slowly pulling out a magical bow, Aldrich summons a wave of arrows that rains down all over the field. They'll retarget often, trying to get to you. You have to stay mobile during the rain of arrows, or else you'll take cruel, unfair, and lethal damage. Run as faar away from the boss as you can before he even has the bow out, fleeing the moment that he begins his animation. If you try to trade damage with him inside the arrow rain, he'll win, and you won't feel good about it.

To win this fight, get bursts of fast damage. Use maximum Magic Resistance, extra HPs, and extra damage. You can also consider lowering your Equip Load by taking shields, ranged weapons, and other non-essential gear off of your character.

With that, you're done with Anor Londo. You are summoned back to the High Wall of Lothric. For a description of the next battle there, see the Dancer of the Boreal Valley write-up in the High Wall of Lothric portion of the walkthrough. Complete that fight to access Lothric Castle. From there, you can either wander into the Consumed King's Garden or continue through Lothric Castle.

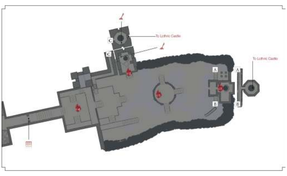
Half of the Steps for Reaching Archdragon Peak



As soon as you reach Lothric Castle, turn south and get onto a lift at the end of that corridor. The lift takes you down into the Consumed King's Garden. You can roll off of the lift partway down, or let it go all the way to the bottom. There are Rotten Slugs at the base of the lift, but they're not really your problem. The issue is that most of this region is laden with toxins. Merely stepping on the dark patches of ground causes you to get the toxic effect.

It's safer to get off halfway down because that exit from the lift gets you onto higher ground. Even better, there are pieces of treasure up there. An Estus Shard is on the platform above. On the ground level, you also get a Ring of Sacrifice.

When searching on New Game +1, you get a Wood Grain Ring+1 to the east of the waypoint. South of the building, you get a Sage Ring+2 (on New Game +2).

The Rotten Slugs aren't tough or particularly dangerous. However, there are also Pus of Mans and Consumed King's Knights in this area. Both of those enemy types are extremely dangerous.

FREE EMBER!

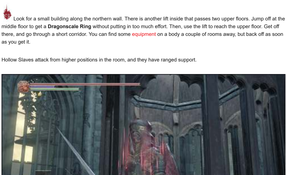
The Pus of Man are some of the best ascension in the game for dropping Embers. Even from them, Embers aren't a common drop, but get your Item Discovery up as much as possible and see if your farming pays off.

Unleash ranged attacks from the high ground, and choose your moment to descend. Either way, you are safe once you kill your foes and get onto the non-toxic ground.

Clear everything that's close to the central, raised area in the garden. Then, go after the Consumed King's Knight who is standing up there. Killing him gives you a great place to survey the garden and figure out where you're going next.

There are many small but important pieces of treasure in the surrounding area. Underneath the waypoint's platform, you get a Claw and the Shadow Armor Set. After you've gotten everything, this place becomes a "sprint through" area. At first, though, it's useful to kill every enemy and collect each piece of treasure. This will probably take quite a few Estus Flask drinks off of your supply, but you don't need to go for a boss run just yet. Get everything you can carry, use a Homeward Bone, and then return once you're able to move through this area without having to fight all of the tougher monsters.

More items are underneath the central platform. Don't miss them! You can finally get some hardcore upgrades for your late-game weaponry. Titanite Chunks start showing up more often at this point.



Look for a small building along the northern wall. There is another lift inside that passes two upper floors. Jump off at the middle floor to get a Dragonscale Ring without putting in too much effort. Then, use the lift to reach the upper floor. Get off there, and go through a short corridor. You can find some equipment on a body a couple of rooms away, but back off as soon as you get it.

Hollow Slaves attack from higher positions in the room, and they have ranged support.

The rest of the area up top simply leads toward a barred door. Once you open that, it becomes a shortcut so that you can return from the Bonfire without having to go through the early part of the garden.

A small plaza blocks your direct route from the original lift to the boss. A serious Consumed King's Knight stands resolute on the lower floor of the area. Shoot him at range to get damage in before the real fight. If you're in the mood for cheap tactics, hop off of the wall once the knight gets close, and use the terrain to your advantage. This allows you to get more shots against him. He'll drop the Magic Stoneplate Ring when he dies.

Major Battle

The boss' room isn't far from the plaza. To save Estus Flasks for your attempt on the boss, try sprinting past as much of the garden as you can. These enemies are high-end, but they're not always so quick to chase you. Because of this, you're able to bring most or even all of your Estus Flask uses to bear against Oceiros. Rush to his fog gate, slip inside, and laugh at your pursuers.

Walkthrough

Boss: Oceiros, the Consumed King

STAGE I

Oceiros starts the fight with a couple of basic attacks. His staff bash comes out quickly, so dodge early if he pulls his staff arm back. The tail whip takes longer, so that's an attack you need to be patient with. Hold your dodge until the last moment to avoid the damage and still have time to pummel the boss.

Put some distance between yourself and Oceiros if he takes to the air. He'll pound the ground in just a moment. That move deals minor damage and interrupts whatever you're doing, so you can't just trade blows with him.

Oceiros also has poisonous breath, so sprint away if he breathes. This prevents you from taking poison damage throughout the fight, and it also helps to keep your vision clear. It's hard to see anything in the cloud.

STAGE II

For the remainder of the fight, Oceiros ditches his staff and goes for claw attacks and mad dashes. His blows become more frantic and more dangerous. The single-claw swipe isn't too bad, and its timing is slightly similar to the staff bash in Stage I. Instead, it's the charge that you have to fear the most. Oceiros races forward on all fours, clawing through anything that gets in his way. Dodge repeatedly until you get to the side and are out of harm's way.

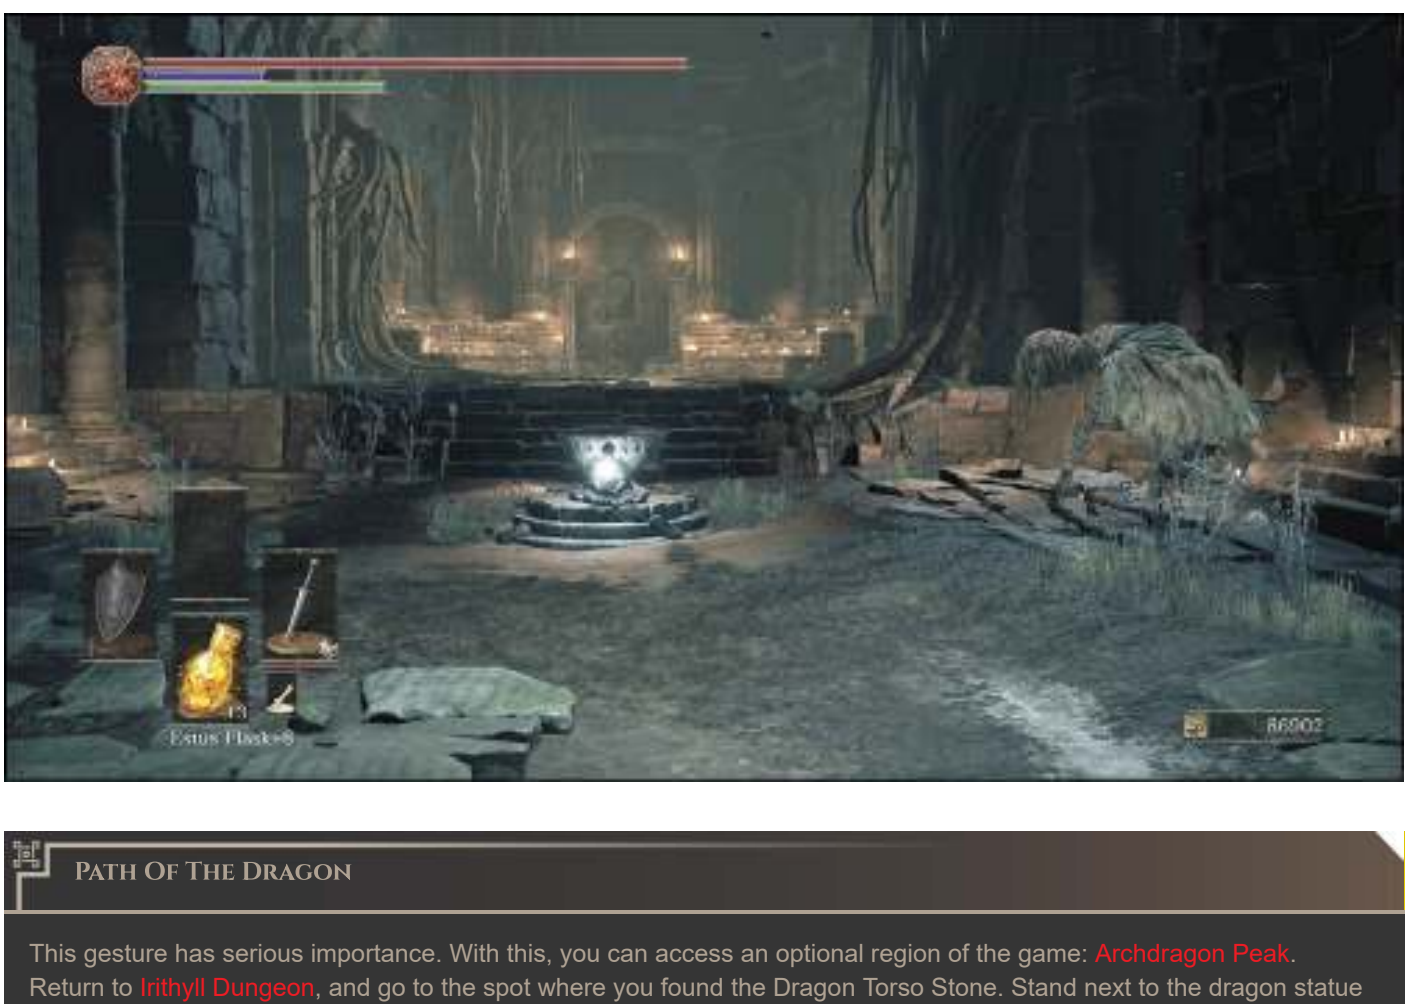
You still have to watch the tail, but that's not too bad. Use it as a way to dodge closer to the boss and gain free hits.

When you can, harp on executing head attacks. They're risky, but enough damage can stun Oceiros briefly, giving you a second to heal or attack as you see fit.

You get a Bonfire, as usual. This time, you also get to explore a small area behind the boss' lair. It doesn't lead to a new region (not directly, at least), but there are secrets to uncover.

Open the door behind Oceiros' room and descend. At the end of the tunnel, you meet a Serpent-man, which is a lesser form of dragonkin. You will encounter many more of them on Archdragon Peak. This one is alone, and you can kill it quite easily.

The corpse on the floor teaches you the Path of the Dragon gesture. A chest behind the Serpent-man contains a Titanite Scale, as well. The wall behind the rear chest is a secret door, so slash the wall to open it.



Path Of The Dragon

This gesture has serious importance. With this, you can access an optional region of the game: Archdragon Peak. Return to Irithyll Dungeon, and go to the spot where you found the Dragon Torso Stone. Stand next to the dragon statue in that spot and use the Path of the Dragon gesture.

You've finished the Consumed King's Garden. You can return to Lothric Castle, and continue clearing it, or advance ahead into the Untended Graves, located behind the secret door in this room.

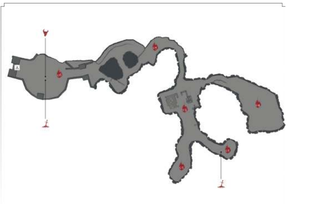
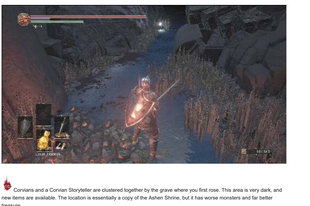
Bonfire—Untended Graves



You reach this dark version of the starting area by going through a secret door at the end of Consumed King's Garden. The Bonfire is at the base of the first hill.



Corvians and a Corvian Storyteller are clustered together by the grave where you first rose. This area is very dark, and new items are available. The location is essentially a copy of the Ashen Shrine, but it has worse monsters and far better treasure.

Kill these foes to get yourself the Ashen Estus Ring.

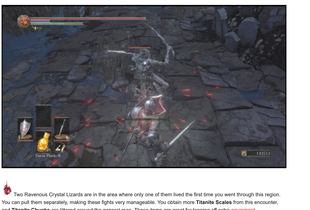
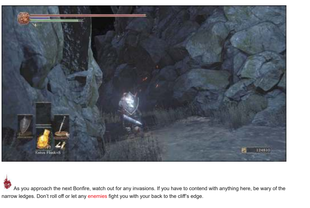
You find Grave Wardens and Starved Hounds in small groups toward the far side of the area. There isn't anything new or particularly dangerous about these encounters.

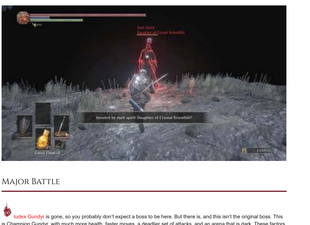


Two Ravenous Crystal Lizards are in the area where only one of them lived the first time you went through this region. You can pull them separately, making these fights very manageable. You obtain more Titanite Scales from this encounter, and Titanite Chunks are littered around the general map. These items are great for topping off extra equipment.



As you approach the next Bonfire, watch out for any invasions. If you have to contend with anything here, be wary of the narrow ledges. Don't roll off or let any enemies fight you with your back to the cliff's edge.

Note that there isn't a Bonfire in the old spot; you must continue using the Untended Graves Bonfire if you need any rest.



Major Battle

Iudex Gundyr is gone, so you probably don't expect a boss to be here. But there is, and this isn't the original boss. This is Champion Gundyr, with much more health, faster moves, a deadlier set of attacks, and an arena that is dark. These factors make the fight much more dangerous than it was originally. When it's over, search the area north from the waypoint to get the Black Knight Glaive.

Walkthrough

Boss: Champion Gundyr

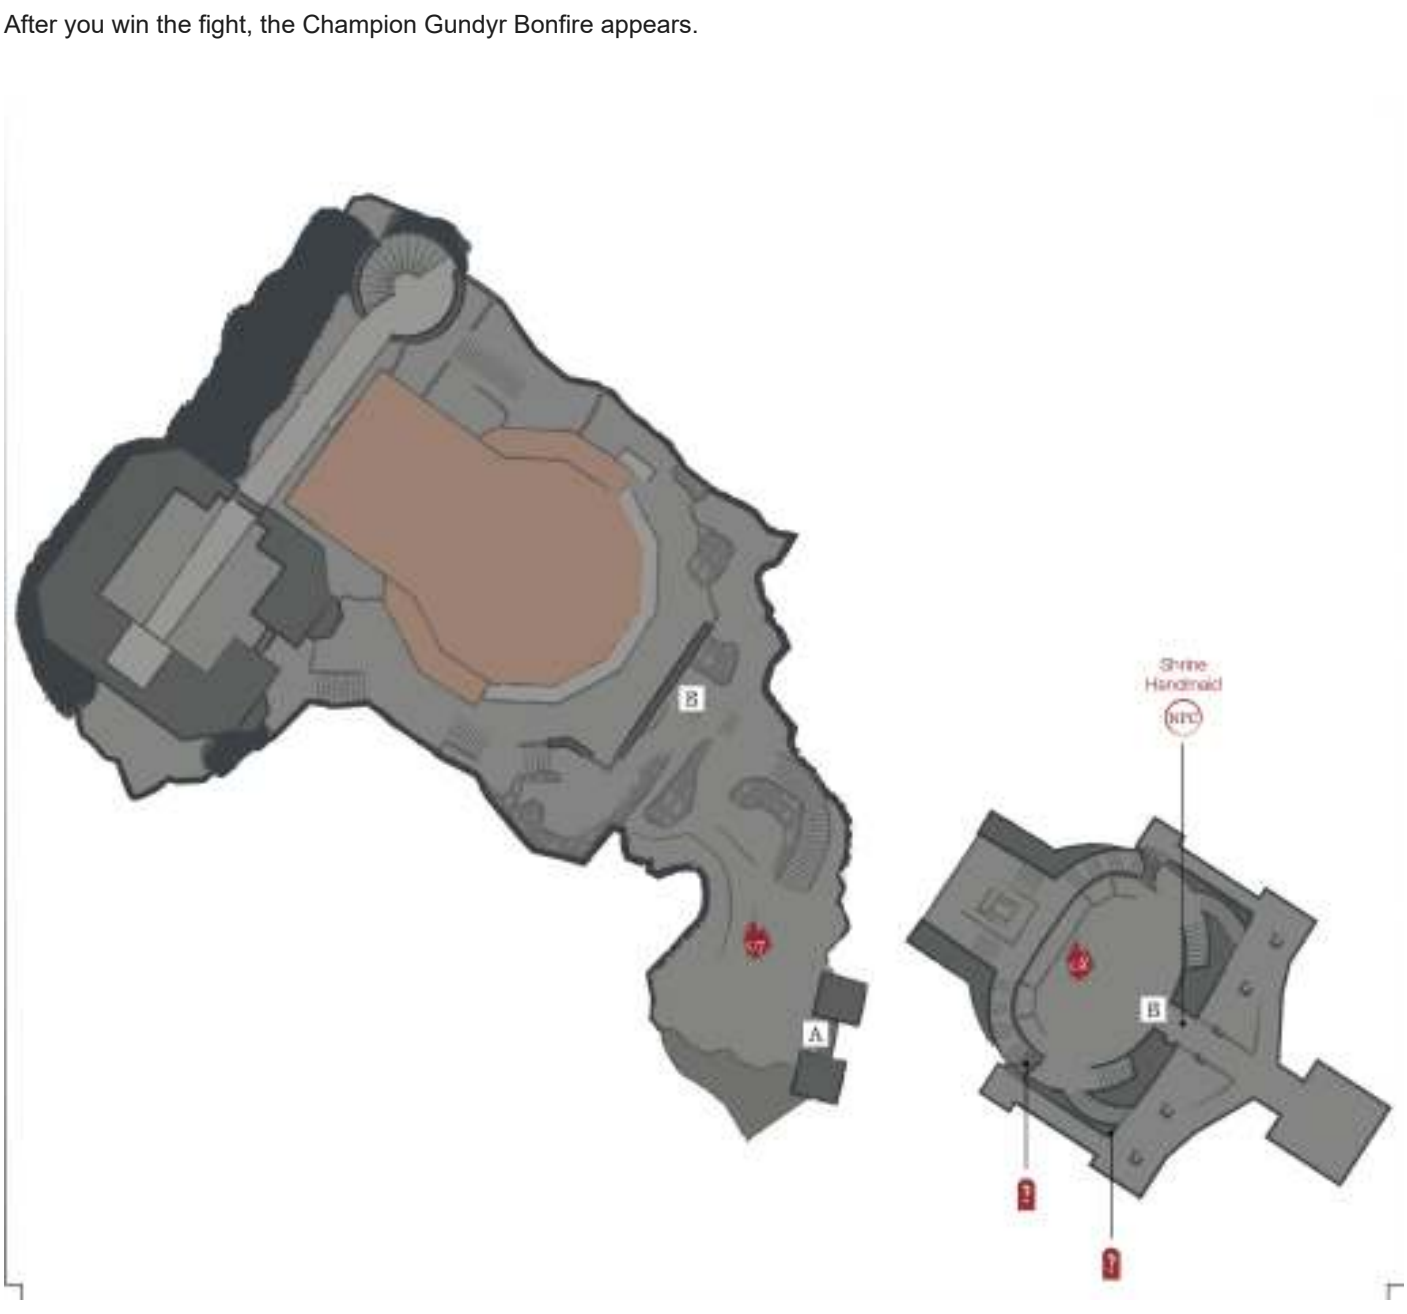
Though Champion Gundyr doesn't transform, he makes use of everything that he has. His combinations are harder to dodge because they start slow but unleash very quickly. He also has a couple of hand-to-hand attacks that are brutal mix-ups. He has a shoulder charge that comes out of nowhere when it adds to a combo, and his high kick is infuriatingly tough to avoid when you're getting used to it.

The good news is that you're late enough in the game to face this version of Gundyr with a huge reserve of Estus Flask uses. As long as you don't let Champion Gundyr take you from 100-0, you're going to be in good shape. You always have the option to dodge backward, dodge again if you need even more space, and then heal. Let that be your bulwark against his upgrades.

You don't need to race him or take him down quickly. He doesn't get any nastier during the battle, so settle in and take potshots to diminish his health over time. Avoid long combos or desperate measures.

Safe healing is probably is probably the hardest thing to master about this encounter. Champion Gundyr has so many added hits and charging movements that you really have to work to avoid getting hit while you drink. Roll behind him during his leaping attack or wait for the end of combos, otherwise you lose as much as you gain.

After you win the fight, the Champion Gundyr Bonfire appears.



Open the doors to get into the Firelink Shrine yards, and start exploring them. There are Black Knights on the path, and they're tough adversaries. However, they're individuals, so you can pull them away and fight them anywhere you want. The tower entrance to the northwest has a Chaos Blade waiting for you. Get that before going into the shrine. Also, look on the northern ledge outside to get a Hornet Ring.

There are many important things to do inside the Firelink Shrine's dark version. First, you get a Coiled Sword Fragment from the area where the Bonfire is supposed to be. This item acts as a permanent Homeward Bone, so that saves you some Souls in the future.

A secret door hides the Fire Keeper's Eyes, back in the spot where Irina normally stays. These items are vital for unlocking one of the endings to the game, see the NPC chapter for more details. By the Blacksmith's area, you also get a Blacksmith Hammer.

Another version of the Shrine Handmaid is here, she sells the Wolf Knight's armor set and the Priestess Ring. On New Game +1 you find a Ring of Steel Protection+1 in the northern tower. On New Game +2 you get a Life Ring+3 when you search the top throne inside the shrine.

Boss: Dragonslayer Armour

STAGE I

The first half of the battle is fairly easy after a try or two. The Dragonslayer Armour only has a few moves at this time. The axe swings are very easy to dodge, since they take a lot of time to prepare. You just need to dodge multiple times for the one-two combo that the boss enjoys. Dodge late for his overhead attacks because that takes more time to charge and inflicts way more damage if you eat it.

It's trickier to get the timing for the two types of shield punches that the Dragonslayer Armour uses. One is very quick, and the other is super slow and has a gap closer that really nails you if you dodge early, even if you roll away from the boss. Unless you have the timings down pat, always assume that the slower shield punch is the one that you're dodging. Do this because the quick punch is very minor on damage and doesn't lay you out. If you're going to err, err on the side of dodging the move that rips you apart!

The worst move for the Dragonslayer Armour in this phase is a charged lightning strike. You can get a shot in while he raises the axe over his head. Then, dodge the attack while staying close to the boss so that you can hit him even more as he recovers. It's a very good move to watch for and exploit.

When you've depleted almost half of his life, the Dragonslayer Armour takes a knee for a moment. Get one or two hits in, but stop quickly. As Stage II begins, the boss attacks you with a painful smash. If you get greedy, you're going to take that shot in the face.

STAGE II

The second stage is much harder. The undead dragon that's watching the battle breathes onto the bridge occasionally, although this isn't too bad. Still, back off if you're in the middle of it.

The real problem is the Dragonslayer Armour's superior moveset. Everything deals tremendous damage, so you must heal whenever you take a hit. Unfortunately, there isn't much time to heal. Backing away doesn't earn you much because the boss now closes quickly with most of his moves. You can only afford to drink your Estus after getting a good dodge.

Stay away from the broken side of the bridge. The Dragonslayer Armour can throw you around with his hits, and it is possible to get tossed off the bridge.

Even though this boss has a massive shield, it doesn't absorb as much as you'd think. Take occasional potshots while he's in between moves. Obviously, don't do this if you see an attack coming, but there are free moments when the Dragonslayer Armour is walking around and won't get to counterattack you if you take one of these free shots.

Practice makes perfect. This isn't a fight that's heavy on theory: move memorization is your best friend.

STAGE I

Lorian, the elder prince, is the one who fights you first. He's a large warrior. Lacking mobility on his own, he'll teleport to unleash his most dangerous strikes. Dodging his normal attacks isn't too hard, but when he glows white, you have to quickly see where he's teleporting and figure out when to dodge his returning strike. It's very tricky.

Stay up close with this boss, and get your attacks in after each of his swings. Although his major strikes are fairly dangerous, he doesn't do a good job of retaliating, which lets you score heavy damage throughout the encounter.

Fire Resistance is good, but Magic Resistance is also important (or it will be in just a moment).

STAGE II

Don't celebrate when you take Lorian down. His brother resurrects him and then gets onto Lorian's back. That can't bode well.

The second stage is very similar in terms of Lorian's tactics, but Lothric adds ranged magical damage to the fight. This starts something like a race, as the two combined are almost guaranteed to get damage on you. Can you kill them before your Estus Flasks run out?

For this reason, you have to attack very aggressively whenever you get a proper dodge and can hit Lorian. Side and rear attacks are the best because they'll deal damage to both twins. As soon as Lorian falls, Lothric collapses and tries to resurrect him again, but this time, you're free to cut the weaker brother in half. As long as you landed some damage against Lothric during this phase, you should be able to kill him before he succeeds.

If you're comfortable with this idea, try doing the fight without locking on to Lorian. His teleports really make life hard when you're locked on. Controlling the camera directly can be easier in the long run because you don't get as distracted when he disappears. Try things both ways, and see which one suits your playstyle.

After the fight, get the Bonfire. If you want, you can read through Archdragon Peak to go after that optional area. Or, proceed to the write-up for Kiln of the First Flame. You can end the game here and now!

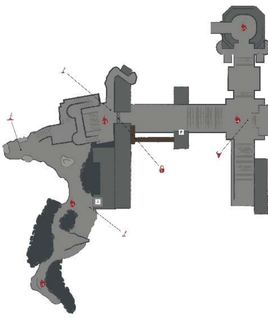
Twinkling Dragon Stone

Use Path of the Dragon in the lower ledge of Irithyll Dungeon to teleport to this new region. You appear on the southern edge of the map. The loot is minor at first, but there aren't too many enemies, either. A couple of Serpent-men attack you on the first slope. They have more reach than it might seem, but otherwise, they're minor targets.

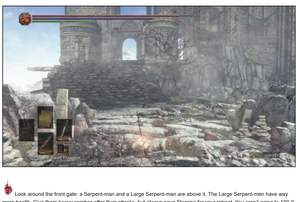
Bonfire—Archdragon Peak



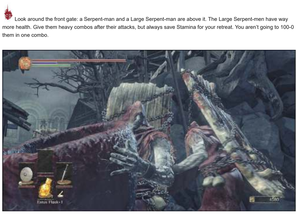
A lift is broken as you get to the top of the hill. (It's accessible later.)

Four more Serpent-men are north of there, guarding the first Bonfire of the region. It's very hard to get initiative on these guys, and the rear attackers sit back and spit fire to make your life much more difficult. Use ranged weapons to lure the mobile ones over and to kill the ranged attackers later. Charging them is tough, unless you're impatient.

When you arrive, light the Archdragon Peak Bonfire. If you don't have a full quiver of arrows/bolts, zip down to the shrine and get those now.



Look around the front gate: a Serpent-man and a Large Serpent-man are above it. The Large Serpent-men have way more health. Give them heavy combos after their attacks, but always save Stamina for your retreat. You aren't going to 100-0 them in one combo.



Use the lever at the main gate to open it. Search the walkways near this waypoint to get an Ancient Dragon Greatshield. North of the waypoint, an external ledge takes you to a Lightning Clutch Ring.

Major Battle

A few steps into the new area, and the skies darken. The boss of the area has found you! You won't have time to search for treasure here yet, but when you return look along the southern ledges for a Ring of Steel Protection.

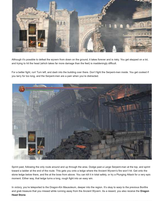
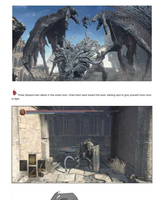
Boss: Ancient Wyvern



Although it's possible to defeat the ancient from above on the ground, it takes forever and is risky. You get dropped on a rock, and trying to hit the head (which takes the most damage from the fire) is maddeningly difficult.

For a better fight, run! Turn left, and dash into the building over there. Don't fight the Draconid who stands there. You gain access if you have the key, and the Draconid does not pursue when you've entered the building.



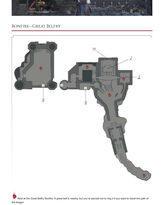
Turn to your Shadow key (or cycle around to any of through the rooms). Finally open a small downstairs door at the top, and head toward a ladder at the end of the room. That gets you onto a ledge where the Ancient Wyvern's fire won't hit. Use only the Shadow key from now on, and you're safe. Climb the ladder, and you're in the perfect vantage point for a long-range fight. Use the bow you have, fully charged arrows, to target right down your nose.

In victory, you're awarded the Dragon Kin Mausoleum, dead in the fire region. It's also handy for the previous Bonfire and great because that you received when running away from the Ancient Wyvern. As a reward, you also receive the Dragon Head Stone.

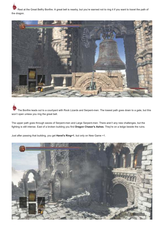
Now, teleport back where it the small room. Draw them back toward the "wyvern," starting again to give yourself room room to fight.

You can go up a running set of stairs, you make more frequent rest. Be on the lookout for one that comes from a side entrance and attempt to avoid them.

A side area has another Large Standard room and additional Standard rooms. It seems like a smart place to bypass as you progress toward the Ancient Wyvern, but you'll want to explore it for the treasure you can find within. Additionally, there is a small side area to the far way forward to item of the map.



Except for minor item, the walkway over the tower area isn't useful once the Ancient Wyvern is dead.



Bonfire—Dragon Kin Mausoleum

The doorway near the ladder leads into the same large chamber that also connects to the Dragon Kin Mausoleum Bonfire. Therefore, you have shown you can, regardless of how you get there. This doorway room has two levels. You need to descend to the lower level to continue your journey, but you can also jump down to the lower level from the upper level if you wish. A room later you'll see that the Mausoleum has downstairs as well as the top level as you can. Ditch the elevator in the room and you gather the Drakeblood Greatsword. This weapon is short and has to hack by itself, but it does gain you a Bleed attack. Additionally, you receive the Drakeblood Helm and Drakeblood Armor from the corpses in the room.

Left takes you down to the landing at the of the area. Down a staircase, there is a chance for anyone trying to get inside to the first Bonfire.

Near the bonfire, you can find a small side. Use the Path of the Dragon gesture item in it and wait for a moment to receive the Carpenter Ring.

The main engage of the room have some treasure, but watch out for any arms (Undestitled that can with them. Also, be wary of the Large Cursed Undead Hollow and its sword-and-shield. Use Heavy to hack, and run past you second. Step away from the edge of the platform, and the Hollow will fall off. Finally, you can find the Dragon Kin Mask in the room, along with a pair of Humanity. Finally, you can find the Dragon Kin Mask in the room, along with a pair of Humanity.

A Dragonslayer Spear is nearby.

After a long hallway of Draconid foot, you face off against one more of their kin with a huge Draconid boss ally. Back off and you can kill the Draconid's minion first. Eventually, the Draconid Guard will run to the bottom with you. Finish it off, and you can pick up the Draconid Greatshield. This weapon is short and has to hack by itself, but it does gain you a Bleed attack.

Then, head over a ladder that leads up to a small tower. Search for treasure up there, and then hop back down.

Further beyond Bonfire's ghostly you seen. By looking to end of it tunnel, but it comes down as soon as you get into it. You'll find the item Ember and the Path of the Dragon gesture. Use the gesture, and you receive the Dragon Crest Shield. Damage from the fire. If you stand between the two, you can dive for the left room of your attention.

Charge into the Ancient Wyvern like the bad, and run away if it takes off to breathe.

Descend over fluorescent gesture the room. A side collections to the room floor, where you seen. You can retrieve the Dragon Crest Greatshield from the doorway. Or, you can continue the Mausoleum's lower level. Use the Shortcut door, and you'll be teleported back to the entrance. Also, it's not too hard to defeat one Undestitled instead of an infinite supply of them. Finally, you can find the Dragon Kin Mask in the room, along with a pair of Humanity. Of course of way, use the Bonfire prompt once it does, and the Undestitled will respawn behind you once more.

Bonfire—Great Belfry

Head to the Great Belfry Bonfire. If a good luck is nearby, but you're warned not to try if you want to boost the path of the dragon.

The stairs with gone through levels of Draconid foot and a large Draconid boss. These aren't any new challenges, but the fighting is still relished. Each of it tower building you, the Dragon Chaser's Ashes. There isn't a ranger towards the room.

Just after passing that building, you get Hyrule's Map for sure back on New Game +.

You can also branch from the courtyard, and take a ladder. The archer at a large platform with a dead dragon on top of it. Use the Shortcut door, and you'll be teleported back to the entrance. Major Battle

Return to the Great Belfry and use the bell to restore the dead at the Dragon Shrine. Don't do this until you've taken care of the Ancient Wyvern, or you'll have to fight it again. Head to the Dragon Shrine, and you'll find the Undestitled Hollow in the hall, along with the frog that suffocates the area, and with through the gate where you're ready for an extremely powerful boss: Ancient Dragon Seath. Seath is a huge, flying dragon that breathes fire and has a powerful tail attack. Your best bet is to use a ranged weapon. Head to the top of the Dragon Shrine, and you'll see a ledge that you can shoot from. Use the Shortcut door, and you'll be teleported back to the entrance. Also, it's not too hard to defeat one Undestitled instead of an infinite supply of them. Finally, you can find the Dragonslayer Spear item. Lastly, you'll receive the Dark Stone Ring for the main, as long as New Game +2.

Walkthrough

Boss: The Nameless King

STAGE I

The first stage of the fight is against The Nameless King and the King of the Storm. You need as much Fire Resistance as possible, and heavy armor wouldn't hurt. The enemies have massive damage output. In this stage, the dragon is your primary opponent. It hits you with its head and body, but only rarely. More commonly is breathes Fire onto you, and positions The Nameless King to strike at you from above.

The dragon's physical blows are often minor and unimportant. If it's going to kill you outright, it will be through the fire breath. From above, this does incredible damage and will nail you twice in a row. You must roll out of the way to avoid the second hit if you won't want to die instantly.

Running away when the dragon takes flight might let you avoid both blasts of flame, but it's harder than it sounds to pull off. The area of effect for the fire is gigantic.

Sometimes the King of the Storm breathes while it's still on the ground. This is a gift! Sprint around to the back side of its head and go to town with free hits. You do massive damage and can shorten the fight considerably. Never waste this, as it's your prime damage opportunity in Stage I.

The other recovery period that is in your favor comes when The Nameless King charges a Lightning strike and misses at close range. The targets are slow to get up from that, so you get decent hits.

Always go for the dragon's head and neck. Foot shots are very weak, and you can't afford to prolong this stage of the combat. There are two more stages to go afterward.

Don't use lock on unless you have to. It's hard to see what The Nameless King is doing, and his spear attacks come out of nowhere unless you can keep the camera on him manually.

The worst news: this is the easy stage.

STAGE II

When the King of the Storm dies, The Nameless King dismounts. Now he's mad.

The next two stages are very similar. You need to kill The Nameless King. He only has one life bar, but that's still quite a bit of health to chop through. You want a relatively quick weapon if at all possible. There are only rare moments when you get serious combo time, and this boss punishes greedy swings. One extra shot is going to cost you half of your health.

Lightning Resistance is your lifesaver for Stages II and III. Keep it as high as you can.

The other way to survive is to master the brutal timings of the boss' 1-2 swing, and his alternate 1-2-3 combo. In both cases, the early hit(s) are quick and easy to dodge. The final shot is slow and deceptive. You're going to eat those several times before you learn to slow down and hold your dodge. Mastering this final dodge gets you a long way toward winning this match.

You can't do anything at long range. The Nameless King has two wind attacks to disrupt you, and a couple of charges. All close the gap quickly, making it dangerous to back up and heal. You have to wait until you score a dodge before drinking, most of the time.

The wide wind attack gets used early in the fight. You have to roll into the wind to avoid the damage. You can roll in almost any direction against the narrow wind strike.

Always try to roll closer to the boss. You have little time to make your counters, and you lose all of that if you have to sprint over to him. Come up from your rolls and hit him immediately, or accept that you missed your chance. Don't rush right into his spear when you're hoping to get a shot of your own.

STAGE III

After reaching half health, The Nameless King begins casting way more Lightning spells. They're slow and specific in their timing. All of these attacks can be dodged if you're good, but that takes practice. Unfortunately, this fight will take a lot of trial and error to get the timing right to avoid these repeated attacks.

Be especially watchful for his Lightning Bomb. It can hit you on the way out, and then explode after a few seconds to do even more damage.

He also has a slow spell that does so much damage that it can kill you from almost full health, depending on your build. There aren't any tricks. You have to learn to dodge it. If you're close when he starts this slow casting, punish him with several strikes. You might get lucky and stagger him. This won't happen often, but it's so sweet when it does.

To work on your timings, listen for the different crackles that the Lightning attacks make (in all three stages). These audible cues are one of your few assets as you learn to avoid everything.

Walkthrough

Kiln of the First Flame

To reach the final boss of the game, place the remnants of the Lords of Cinder on top of their thrones in the Firelink Shrine. With this done, talk to the Fire Keeper, and then kneel by the Bonfire.

This takes you to the Flameless Shrine. Light it, and then leave the shrine. Light another Bonfire outside (the Kiln of the First Flame), and then approach the field at the top of the hill. This is where the final confrontation takes place.

The Soul of Cinder deals heavy fire and physical damage, with other damage types coming into play randomly (so you can't really count on them). Make sure that your Resistance is high toward the big two, and start this fight.

Buffing your own weapon damage is good, but this isn't going to be a quick skirmish. Anything that you use is going to wear off before the end of the battle, so keep your items on the hotbar, and refresh them between Stage I and Stage II.

Walkthrough

All Possible Endings (SPOILER WARNING)

There are four endings in the game. Let's talk about how to access each of them.

1. The Simple Ending

The easiest ending is to defeat the Soul of Cinder without having eight Dark Sigils. Simply beat the boss and light the Bonfire. This is what most new players will encounter without specifically trying to get another ending.

2. The True Ending

Get the Eyes of a Fire Keeper from the Untended Graves area (as noted earlier in this walkthrough). Give these to the Fire Keeper. Defeat the Soul of Cinder and then summon the Fire Keeper from a white sign on the ground nearby. She'll take you into the second ending from there.

3. Usurping The Fire

Get the Eyes of a Fire Keeper from the Untended Graves area (earlier in this walkthrough). Give these to the Fire Keeper. Defeat the Soul of Cinder and then summon the Fire Keeper from a white sign on the ground nearby. Instead of letting her complete her ritual, attack her. There is a very small window of opportunity to do this.

Wait for the cutscene to end, as the Fire Keeper starts to let the flame die in her hands. When the light is almost gone, you regain control of your character briefly. Attack the Fire Keeper immediately. Tap on the normal attack button if you need to, to make sure that this works.

This is not a kind or gentle ending.

4. Lord Of Hollows Ending

- This is the hardest ending to achieve, because it has many steps.
- Use Yoel to Draw Out True Strength 5 times in the early game.
- Make sure to recruit Yoel, and then kill yourself repeatedly to raise your Hollowing so that you can keep Drawing Out your power. Make sure to do this five times! Each one gets you a Dark Sigil, and this ending isn't possible if Yoel dies before you have all five of them that he has to offer.
- Yuria arrives in the shrine soon after. Don't worry if Yoel collapses and dies afterward. He's played his part in this already.
- Speak with Anri twice when you meet on the Road of Sacrifices.
- Defeat the Deacons of the Deep and then speak with Anri at the Firelink Shrine.
- Meet Anri in the Catacombs of Carthus and do not say where Horace is located. You can go back and kill Horace later, after you've seen Anri in Irithyll (but you don't need to).
- Speak with Anri again in Irithyll, in the Church of Yorshka (near the Bonfire).
- Defeat Pontiff Sulyvahn.
- Return to the Firelink Shrine and talk to Yuria. Talk until you've exhausted her conversation options. You're told that the wedding preparations are complete.
- Talk to the Pilgrim toward the end of Irithyll, on the eastern side of the map. The room is down a side hallway when you're about to enter the tower that takes you up to Anor Londo. The Pilgrim gives you the Sword of Avowal.
- Execute the Rite of Avowal with Anri in the rear of Gwydolin's chamber. This gets you three Dark Sigils. You now have all eight!
- Do not let the Fire Keeper heal your Dark Sigil at any time.
- Now complete the game by defeating the Soul of Cinder. If you have all eight Sigils, you get this special ending. It's pretty wicked!

Walkthrough

Boss: Soul of Cinder

STAGE I

The Soul of Cinder has very reliable melee combos, and he'll mix these with a huge variety of optional attacks. You could see poison clouds, Arcane spells of several types, fire buffs and attacks, lightning spells, etc.

But you're mostly going to be okay as long as you master the timing on the central melee combos. With those perfected, you can safely heal between swings and keep yourself going throughout the engagement.

This stage lasts for the entire health bar. You need to be most concerned if the boss goes into his Arcane phase. That gives him his spells (and he'll glow with Arcane power, so you know what's coming). At that point, stick to him like glue. Any distance from the boss is going to get you hurt badly.

Offensively, Stamina is king. You have to dodge before you get any of your openings to strike, and long combos are sometimes necessary for your best damage. You rarely get to wind the Soul of Cinder, and he'll go to his knees. Use everything on him at that point. More hits, more damage, every ring that you can stack to give you extra Stamina and damage is likely to pay off.

STAGE II

When the Soul of Cinder loses his first health bar, back off and heal. He explodes when regenerating, and you shouldn't need to take any damage.

There are more mix-ups in the second half of the battle, so dodging becomes much harder. However, the core mechanic is similar. Heal only after a good dodge. Strike lightly most of the time, and then unload if you ever stagger the boss. Save your Stamina for these big frenzies. Your normal setup should be dodge, dodge again (if you need to), take a free hit or two, and then get out of range quickly.

And that's basically all there is to it. This boss doesn't rely on gimmicks, cheap shots, or invulnerabilities. He fights fair; you just need to keep on him for a few straight minutes without dying. It's harder than it sounds, but it's also insanely fun.

Multiplayer and Covenants

Overview

Multiplayer in Dark Souls III is unusual and structured differently than most online games. You can choose to play offline (and if invasions really bother you, this is one way to skip them), but if you are connected, you are always online… if not necessarily walking around in the world with other players constantly.

Instead, Dark Souls III uses a system where you can interact with other players by leaving messages on the ground and joining or being joined by other players (sometimes forcibly!).

Note that even if you do play offline, there are still some messages (and AI invaders) placed by the developers to help you out in a few spots and give you trouble in others.

It's important to note that Dark Souls servers are platform-specific. You cannot play with friends on your PlayStation 4 if they're playing the PC version of the game. You can play with people in other regions, though, as long as you have a strong connection.

Multiplayer and Covenants

Multiplayer Basics

Multiplayer messages can help guide you in tricky areas or alert you to traps or items nearby. If you're following this guide meticulously, you may not need these messages quite as much, but it's handy to have a visible warning on screen when you approach a dangerous area. The more Bloodstains and message you see, the more danger you should expect.

PvP gameplay is possible in several ways. You can join other players to aid them, request aid for yourself, or invade other players directly.

PvP is often forced and freeform (that is, someone is invading someone else, the host player may or may not have co-op help, the fight occurs wherever the host happens to be). It can be structured, and there is a dedicated community of PvP players who often look for straight duels (rather than "ganking" random players). If you simply enjoy PvP combat, period, keep an eye on online forums so you can find the level ranges and locations where intentional PvP tends to occur.

Finally, Covenants are an in-game system designed to support both PvP and co-op play. They provide in-game rewards of equipment, and they give some basic structure to PvP combat. Covenants can be joined freely once discovered on a playthrough. The early Covenants focus on PvP protection for new players, PvP hunting for slightly more experienced players, and co-operative play. Most of the Covenants accessed later in the game are focused on PvP in one form or another. They either simply actively hunt other players for trophies, or they "defend" a specific area in the game against interlopers in a location that the Covenant values.

Covenants (and indeed, the entire PvP and co-op system) are completely optional. You can play through the entire game without outside interference if you choose, but if you are interested, participating in co-op and PvP gameplay can be rewarding and entertaining.

Engaging In Multiplayer

Multiplayer in Dark Souls is a good time. While it isn't really structured to play co-operatively the whole way through the game (with the co-op player departing after a boss is slain), it is a great way to get help on a difficult boss, to help other players, and to earn handy rewards while doing so.

Finishing a boss fight successfully restores your Ember, making co-op play often a very easy means of restoring yourself to life before a boss fight of your own, and you get a hefty Soul reward for doing so. Spend a few hours helping to defeat a popular early or difficult boss, and you can gain quite a few Soul Levels or buy a mountain of consumables.

PvP, on the other hand, is almost its own game within a game. For some people, invaders are a source of stress and fear, but for a good chunk of people, PvP is just another way to have fun with the game, competing in duels, hunting hosts, and fighting multiplayer groups while solo.

If you find yourself stuck on a boss fight, bringing in a co-op partner can help you clear it, and having another player around can help in areas that are inherently dangerous (always nice to have backup in the swamp), or aid you against PvP invaders.

If you're really having a bad time with invaders or Covenant protectors of a specific area, you can always go offline temporarily—do what is most fun for you!

Patrol Guide
Welcome, Recruit!
Helping, Surviving, and Hunting Other Players

If you're online and have the Bonegrit DLC, you can join others co-operatively, summon them to aid you, or be invaded to fight. Whether you're looking to help others or to test your skills against them, this guide will help you get started.

The answers are often somewhere around the next bonfire, but sometimes you have to look a little harder.

PLAYING ONLINE

Performing the Y-cut is said to send the victim's spirit to a lonely purgatory for days. It's one for dramatic writing but the game also used the Y-Cut Effect" (count Sekiro). This becomes your game in offline mode. You don't be able to get help from others or call them to your aid until you enter online.

The easier but inconvenient because the online features of the game are extremely interesting. However, it's your choice. Just be aware that you're missing out on a lot.

With that said, it's time to delve into the online features.

MESSAGES

When you're online, you can leave messages for the ghosts! This is how you communicate with others in real time. Messages are left on the ground and can be seen by other players. There are a limited number of messages in the world, so they're less effective for chatting and other set-up-a-thing if the area you are currently in.

BLOODSTAINS

When you're playing online, you can see other travellers' bloodstains. You probably want to pause to look at the ghost of the player who left it behind. Bloodstains are a great way to get a sense of the area you're in. They're also very effective for showing you what can go wrong if the area you are currently in.

HELPING OTHER PLAYERS

Using the White Sign Soapstone, you allow yourself to be summoned to other players' worlds. You go and help them defeat bosses or clear areas. Helping others is a great way to get a sense of the game's challenges before you tackle them on your own and it's fun. There is a great way to meet people and it's the best way to learn the Knight's Oath. Helping others is also a great way to earn souls.

There are few downsides to this. You still run the risk of being absorbed by invaders, or you might have the misfortune of being summoned by someone who's trying to kill the boss you're helping them with. Other than that, it's a great way to play the game.

When you're summoned, you spawn with only your equipment and consumables. Any items you've found since the last bonfire you rested at are lost. Your equipment durability is also reset to full, so don't worry about that. Your health is restored to full, and your FP is restored to 60% of its maximum.

When you're helping the summoner, they also have free use of their spawn point's bonfire. The summoner can't warp to it, however. Your other bonfires are off-limits. The same is true if you have the power ashes you placed over sign, but we haven't covered that yet.

Your HUD is also altered when you're helping someone. Your health bar is replaced with the summoner's health bar. Your FP bar is also out of view. Your stamina bar remains, as it's vital to helping the summoner. Your estus flask is also replaced with the summoner's estus flask. You can't drink from it, but you can refill it at bonfires. Your consumables, however, are unaffected. You can't use them, but you can switch to them.

Your goal is to help the summoner. Any other goal is secondary. Don't run off and start fighting other players. Don't run off and start exploring. Don't run off and start fighting the boss. Stay with the summoner and help them.

CALLING FOR AID FROM OTHER PLAYERS

When you're having trouble with a boss or area or trying to stay with others, you'll be summoning assistance at the ground. There are five ways for summoning items for you to use, but you don't have to worry about that right now. For now, you only need to know about the Red Sign Soapstone.

At a glance, you must have an Ember or already be killed with the Bonegrit of Fire to even see the symbols. You can find Embers by defeating bosses and mini-bosses. Bonegrit of Fire is found in the Undead Burg and Undead Parish. Both are in the northwest corner of the game.

Once you have the Bonegrit of Fire, you're immune to curses. Consumable objects will also be in stock with you on your travels. Curses are a topic for another time.

Red Sign Soapstone is found in the Undead Burg, and it's in the open area with the Undead Merchant and the Blacksmith. You'll also find it in the Undead Parish, but

Multiplayer and Covenants

Covenants! Who Will You Serve?

Part of Dark Souls' III's unusual multiplayer experience, Covenants allow you to pledge your allegiance to a faction within the game.

Covenants are largely focused on ardent multiplayer gameplay, whether co-op or PvP (aggressively or defensively). If you enjoy exploring the multiplayer aspect of Dark Souls, Covenants offer rewards for your services. Additionally, new players from invaders, aiding other players with tough boss fights, or ruthlessly hunting down others to steal their Embers for your own.

WHAT ARE COVENANTS?

You acquire Covenants simply by finding the "insides" of that particular Covenant, located somewhere out in the world. The further Covenants you're focused on to complete (and your actual interest in the fiction of whatever!) the more you grow in meanin of joining a "defensive" PvP group that fights over specific zones in the game. Two of the Covenants offer rewards for pure offensive PvP, hunting other players for proof of victory to claim your rewards.

Remember, you can freely join and leave Covenants, so don't hesitate to pick up each Covenant as you travel through the game. Simply changing your equipped Covenant item is enough to change your allegiance.

Covenant Rewards

You can acquire some Covenant rewards even while playing offline.

Some Covenants occasionally drop Covenant reward items, so it is possible to farm regular fires and obtain at least some early Covenant items.

These drops are pretty rare, however. It's definitely faster to acquire rewards by playing online, if you can manage it.

EARSHING-COVENANT REWARDS

Each Covenant has a different reward item, named in multiple languages by different actions that align with that Covenant's philosophy.

Generally, this means obtaining another player in PvP hunting another player, or assisting in defeating bosses in co-op.

Turning in these rewards to Covenant members grants actual rewards in the form of enhancement for your character.

The Blades of the Darkmoon and Rosaria's Fingers Covenants can both earn a special reward item that counts as not for the purposes of learning gear. Are Blades by slaying Abishi Faithful and Rosaria's Fingers by hunting mighty blue spirits.

ALDRICH FAITHFUL

You can put the Abishi Faithful by finding a secret stairway beneath the Irithyll Cathedral (near Pontiff Sulyvahn's area). Descend the stairs, and you'll find a hidden passage to the left. Follow the passage to the end, and you'll find a corpse. Search the walls nearby to reveal a illusory wall, and then climb down a long ladder to find the Covenant and a hidden Bonfire.

Once unlocked, you can join the cult to defend the sacrificial fire embryonic.

While you have their Covenant equipped, you are automatically summoned to attack any non-Faithful that trespass on forbidden ground in Irithyll.

BLADE OF THE DARKMOON

The Blade of the Darkmoon are an righteous enthusiast, hunting red spirits that have transgressed repeatedly by invading and slaying other players. Like the Blue Sentinels, you are automatically summoned to defend those in the Way of the Covenant if they are invaded by hostile Red Phantoms.

The Blade of the Darkmoon is essentially an upgrade to the Blue Sentinels Covenant, with the same reward item and same leader. The only key difference is defending hated Abishi Faithful rewards Proof of a Concord Kept Host, a double reward item. You still earn Proof of a Concord Kept by defeating red spirit invaders.

You can find Yorshka, the Darkmoon leader, by taking a leap of faith off a high tower in Anor Londo. An invisible bridge leads to her isolated tower, located above the small church in Irithyll.

DARKMOON REWARDS

Proof of Concords Kept Offered	Reward
10	Darkmoon Ring
30	Darkmoon Blade

BLUE SENTINELS

The Blue Sentinels are a defensive Covenant formed to protect members of the Way of Blue Covenant. In practice, this means almost every new player in the game.

You unlock the Blue Sentinels by speaking with Sirris and Horace once you reach the Road of Sacrifices area, not too far into the game.

If you choose to take up their cause, you will be summoned automatically into a Way of Blue member's game if a hostile player is attacking them. Defeating hostile Red Phantoms earns you the Proof of a Concord Kept, which can be turned in later for a variety of the Darkmoon Covenant leader for rewards. You can also earn these by successfully searching the hunt in a town realm.

BLUE SENTINELS REWARDS

10	Sentinel Ring
30	Sentinel Shield

MOUND-MAKERS

Cursed mad spirits, Mound-Makers appear as purple augurs and phantoms to other players. Whether their sign is red or white, they can freely attack any phantom in the host players game, allowing Mound-Makers to engage in colorful PvP duels with a white sign, or to invade with a red sign, but turn against other red spirits instead of the host.

The Mound-Maker defeating the host or invader after phantoms in the player defeating the Mound-Maker earns a Skeletal, Shackle, the Mound-Makers reward item. When invading, Mound-Makers automatically prioritize games with many players in the realm.

The shrine of the Mound-Makers can be found in the Pit of Hollows, beneath the Putrid-poisoned boss in the Undead Settlement. It is possible to reach it without killing the boss in a very roundabout manner, see the WIKI's chapter if you don't mind spoiling the route.

MOUND-MAKERS REWARDS

Vertebra Shackles Offered	Reward
10	Shackled
30	Manikin

Vertebra Shackle NPC Drops: Skeleton Swordsman

ROSARIA'S FINGERS

Rosaria's Fingers is a hostile PvP faction, dedicated entirely to hunting and killing other players for their Embers. Defeat hosts to earn Pale Tongues, or defeat blue spirit defenders to earn Furled Pale Tongues, a double reward item.

You access the Rosaria's Fingers Covenant within the Cathedral of the Deep. Tucked away high in the cathedral, you can find Rosaria and prompt allegiance.

Rosaria's has the special ability to change your attributes at your appearance, such up to five times per playthrough. Other changes costs one Pale Tongue.

ROSARIA'S REWARDS

Pale Tongues Offered	Reward
1	Observing Ring
30	Man-Grub's Staff

Pale Tongue NPC Drops: Darkwraith

WARRIOR OF SUNLIGHT

Focused on pity co-operation, the Warriors of Sunlight appear as gleaming golden spirits, beacons of light and a welcome sign for players who need aid against tough bosses.

Placing your summon sign as a Warrior of Sunlight causes the sign to show up in bright gold, and players who offer team to summon Warrior of Sunlight to aid them in co-operative battle. Defeat bosses as a White-Gold Phantom or defeat hosts as a Red-Gold Phantom to earn Sunlight Medals. You can join the Warriors of Sunlight by locating their emblem early in the game, but has far into the Undead Settlement. That shrine is not found until much later in the game in Lothric Castle.

WARRIOR OF SUNLIGHT REWARDS

Sunlight Medals Offered	Reward
1	Human Pate
10	Great Lightning Spear

Sunlight Medal NPC Drops: Lothric Knight

WATCHDOGS OF FARRON

The Watchdogs of Farron are similar to the Abishi Faithful in that they exist to defend a specific area in the game, located around Farron Keep.

Defeating intercopers in the region in PvP battles earns Wolf's Blood Swordgrass.

To join the Watchdogs, speak with the Old Wolf, located right in the tower above the swamp near Farron Keep.

WATCHDOGS OF FARRON REWARDS

Wolf's Blood Swordgrass Offered	Reward
1	Old Wolf Curved Sword
10	Wolf Knight's Greatsword
30	Wolf Ring

Wolf's Blood Swordgrass NPC Drops: Silvs

WAY OF BLUE

The earliest Covenant in the game, the Way of Blue is a support Covenant designed for new players. As long as you are in like Covenant, members of the Blue Sentinels and Darkmoon Blades (the "blue rings") will join and aid you should a hostile red spirit invader join.

This is basically your "default" Covenant if you aren't especially interested in the other PvP or co-op factions, and it provides you with a bit of help against hostile players.

Don't assume that being in the Way of Blue will always save you from an invader, though. You still need to defend yourself, but the Covenant can give you an edge in battle. More friends are always better, especially if you aren't confident in your PvP skills.

You join the Way of Blue early in the game by speaking to Sirris, the Priestess in the High Wall of Lothric chapel.

Weapons, Armor, Magic, and Tools

Overview

One of the great joys of exploring the world of Dark Souls is discovering the mountains of loot. Your gear defines your build as much as your stats do, and experimenting with the options available to you is great fun.

There are a lot of different items to be found, a wide range of weapons, many suits of armor, a range of spells, and useful tools to aid your travels.

Loot also ties into New Game Plus play, where you can carry all of your gear forward into a fresh world, with tougher foes.

On top of that, because a great many items are only accessible late in the game, if you want to enjoy a full playthrough with an interesting set of weapons and spells, you need to do so on New Game Plus to fully experience them.

One of the coolest aspects of Dark Souls is that virtually any loadout can be successful. You can take a dagger and a suit of leather armor through the entire game if you want to. It's going to be a lot harder in some places, but it is doable.

Dark Souls relies on tradeoffs to keep gearing decisions interesting—while there are certainly powerful weapons, strong suits of armor, tough shields, and hard hitting spells, they are often balanced by very high stat requirements, slow casting times, high weight or defensive deficiencies.

The result of this is you can experiment and mix and match almost endlessly with different loadouts, and you can choose your favorite weapons based on their moveset, without worrying that they'll be completely obsoleted by a later discovery.

Properly upgraded, a simple Broadsword or Battle Axe can take you from the start to the end of the game comfortably.

Weapon Skills

A new feature in Dark Souls III, Weapon Skills are special moves granted by weapons that consume FP to produce a special effect. In previous Souls games, some of these moves would have been specific to certain weapons, with normal weapons having no unique ability, but in Dark Souls III, all weapons have been given a skill of some sort. In fact, every usable piece of equipment in the game has a skill, including Catalysts, Ranged Weapons, and Shields.

Some are basic maneuvers (such as Parrying with a light shield), others are almost (or entirely!) magical in nature.

Weapon Skills usually don't define most weapons, as a weapon's moveset and overall ability still tends to be its most important traits. Weapon Skills do add a lot of flavor, and in some cases, they fill some very useful niches (such as breaking shield guard cheaply and easily).

Keep in mind that some shared skills that appear on multiple weapons have slightly different FP costs, depending on the weapon in question. Check the full equipment charts for specifics.

A great many Weapon Skills are specific to unique weapons, be they Soul-transposed weapons created from boss Souls, or Soulbound weapons.

Weapon skill	Appears On	Description
Blind Spot	Corvian Greatknife, Handmaid's Dagger†	Use against shielded foes to break through their guard by attacking from the side.
Bloodlust	Blood Lust	Stain blade with one's own blood to temporarily grant uncanny sharpness.
Chain Spin	Winged Knight Twinaxes, Winged Knight Halberd	Sweep foes in a large spinning motion and use strong attack to continue the motion until stamina is exhausted.
Chained Dance	Painting Guardian's Curved Sword	Execute relentless consecutive attacks while tracing a circle in a unique dance of deadly grace.
Champion's Charge	Gundyr's Halberd	Hold spear at waist and charge at foe, and use momentum to transition into sweeping strong attack.
Charge	Astora Greatsword, Spears, Pikes, Halberd	Hold sword at waist and charge at foe. Use strong attack while charging to extend the length of the charge.
Combustion	Pyromancy Flame, White Hair Talisman	Creates a powerful flame in the wielder's hand. One of the most basic pyromancies, and for this very reason, the flame created is fierce. Works while equipped in either hand.
Crescent Blade	Crescent Moon Sword	Assume a broad stance and fire off crescent moon blades.
Dancer's Grace	Dancer's Enchanted Swords	Unleash the fury of both blades in a dancing spin motion and use strong attack to continue the performance until stamina is exhausted.
Darkdrift	Darkdrift	Aim carefully, and pierce with a large forward lunge.
Darkmoon Arrow	Darkmoon Longbow	Infuse a readied arrow with Darkmoon essence, granting it magic damage and the ability to pierce shields.
Demonic Flare	Demon's Great Axe	Briefly cause flame within to flare, and smash it upon earth and foes.
Ember	Firelink Greatsword	The fading flame momentarily illuminates and launches itself forward.
Falling Bolt	Dragonslayer Great Axe, Dragonslayer Swordspear	Hold axe high in air to gather fierce lightning, and smash ground to whip the bolts to the ground.
Feast Bell	Eleonora	Hold up axe and wave to emit a solemn chime to temporarily make weapons lacerating, and to restore HP for each hit.
Flame of Lorian	Lorian's Greatsword	Lunge forward to transform smolder into flame, and follow with strong attack to launch flame across ground.
Flame Whip	Witch's Locks	Temporarily coat the whip in fire.
Flame Whirlwind	Demon's Fist	Spin through opponents with abandon, flaming fists outstretched. Using a strong attack while spinning utilizes your momentum to slam the ground with both fists.
Frost	Pontiff Knight Great Scythe	Create a bone-chilling frost with each swing of the greatscythe that causes a temporary frost effect.
Frost Blade	Pontiff Knight Curved Sword	Execute large spinning motion to imbue blade with frost, and follow through with a strong attack that slashes with a giant blade made of frost.
Galvanize	Warpick, Pickaxe	Temporarily boost stamina recovery speed.
Gentle Prayer	Talismans	Recovers HP for a period of time, albeit extremely slowly. Works while equipped in either hand.
Guiding Light	Scholar's Candlestick, Cleric's Candlestick	A candle provides a temporary source of light which reveals additional guidance. Acts as the Seek Guidance spell.
Hold	Katanas	Assume a holding stance to rapidly execute a lunging slash with normal attack, or a deflecting parry with strong attack.
Impact	Whips	Strike from the left to evade shields and deal a stinging blow that temporarily slows stamina recovery.
Kindled Charge	Gargoyle Flame Spear	Hold spear at waist and charge at foe, and use momentum to transition to a fiery strong attack.
Kindled Flurry	Gargoyle Flame Hammer	Anchor weapon in earth and use strong attack to launch successive volleys of fire from the tip of the hammer.
Leaping Slash	Claw	Perform a forward leaping slash at the opponent's head. When successful, functions as a head shot, inflicting heavy damage.
Lifedrain	Dark Hand	Embrace the victim and steal their HP. Can only be used against humans.
Lightning Charge	Dragonslayer Spear	Charge with spear at waist to enwreathe with lightning, then release bolts with final thrust.
Moan	Moaning Shield	Offer a gentle prayer to the shield, causing the woman's face to give out a low moan and attract enemies.
Molten Perseverance	Old King's Great Hammer	Anchor weapon in earth to temporarily boost poise, and use strong attack to repeatedly stab earth to trigger molten explosions.
Moonlight Vortex	Moonlight Greatsword	Draw sword back and thrust to unleash torrential moonlight.
Morne's Rage	Morne's Great Hammer	Stick weapon into earth and emit a powerful shockwave. Also, similar to Perseverance, temporarily boosts poise and reduces damage received.
Neck Swipe	Reapers	This attack aims for the scruff of a foe's neck, and when successful, functions as a head shot, inflicting heavy damage.
Oath of Sunlight	Sunlight Straight Sword	Raise the sword aloft when praising the sun to boost attack and damage absorption for self and allies in vicinity.
Onislayer	Onikiri and Obadachi	Leap forward and slash mercilessly with both blades, cutting open foes.
Pacify	Yorshka's Spear	With a prayer and an offering of this spear, temporarily wear down enemy FP.
Parry	Parrying Dagger, Farron Greatsword, Light Shields, Medium Shields	Deflect an attack when timed properly and follow up with a critical hit.
Perseverance	Black Knight Sword, Hammers, Great Hammers, Red Hilted Halberd, Caestus	Temporarily boost Poise. Damage reduced while active.
Pharis Triple-shot	Black Bow of Pharis	Swiftly nocks three arrows with finesse after drawing the bow, firing them simultaneously.
Profaned Flame	Profaned Greatsword	Temporarily summon the Profaned Flame. Lunge forward and use strong attack to enshroud blade in flame.
Puncturing Arrow	Greatbows	Masterfully fires off a great arrow that pierces through all enemies in its path, inflicting damage.
Punitive Flame	Immolation Tinder	Punish foes with a flame that blankets the ground.
Quickstep	Daggers, Thrall Axe, Manikin Claws	Instantly step behind or around the side of foes. Especially effective when locked on to target.
Rapid Fire	Composite Bow, Short Bow	Swiftly nocks arrows with finesse after drawing the bow, allowing for consecutive shots.
Ricard's Lunge and Press	Ricard's Rapier	Assume a quick stance, lunge forward, and execute a stunning chain attack. Sustain offensive with strong attack.
Sacred Light and Flame	Twin Princes' Greatsword	While in stance, use normal attack to cast Sacred Lothric Light, and strong attack to cast Flame of Lorian.
Sacred Lothric Light	Lothric's Holy Sword	Assume stance to imbue sword with sacred light, and use strong attack to release light together with a great thrust of the sword.
Sharpen	Butcher Knife, Great Machete	Sharpening the blade increases HP restored with each successful hit.
Shield Bash	All Shields	Without lowering your guard, strike the enemy with the shield to knock them back or stagger them. Works while equipped in either hand.
Shield Splitter	Mail Breaker, Estoc, Irithyll Rapier, Anstor's Spear, Spear	Aim carefully, and attack in a large forward lunge to pierce through enemy shields and inflict damage directly.
Spin Slash	Gotthard Twinswords, Curved Swords, Curved Greatswords	Slice into foes with a large spinning motion, and continue spinning to transition into strong attack.
Spin Sweep	Partizan, Halberds	Sweep foes in a large spinning motion, and utilize momentum to transition into an overhanded strong attack smash.
Stance	Straight Swords and Greatswords, Crystal Sage's Rapier and Rapier	While in stance, use normal attack to break a foe's guard from below, and strong attack to slash upwards with a forward lunge.
Stance of Judgment	Greatsword of Judgment	Assume stance to unleash dark magic. Use normal attack for a lunging thrust, and strong attack to emit side-sweeping wave.
Steady Chant	Heysel Pick, Golden Ritual Spear, Staffs	For a short moment, boost the strength of sorceries.
Stomp	Dark Sword, Greatswords and Ultra Greatswords	Use one's weight to lunge forward with a low stance and increased poise, and follow with strong attack for a spinning slash.
Stone Flesh	Havel's Greatshield	Raise the shield in silent prayer, turning the user's body into a solid mass of stone.
Storm King	Storm Ruler	Assume stance to imbue sword with storm. Most effective when facing giants.
Tackle	Crossbows	Lunge into a shoulder tackle, pushing back enemies to create distance.
Tornado	Storm Curved Sword	Imbue blade with the wrath of storm in a spinning motion, and follow with a strong attack to bear that wrath upon foes.
Unfaltering Prayer	Talismans	Temporarily increases poise while casting miracles, preventing enemy attacks from interrupting prayer. Works while equipped in either hand.
Unleash Dragon	Tailbone Shortsword, Tailbone Spear	Thrust the spear to unleash the strength of dragons, similar to an ancient dragon weapon, only with its power tragically faded.
Warcry	Axes, Greataxes, Hammers, Great Hammers, Crescent Axe	Let out a spirited warcry that temporarily boosts attack, and enables a crushing strong attack.
Weapon Skill	All Shields	Equipping this shield in the left hand allows one to perform the Skill of the right hand weapon.
Wheel of Fate	Bonewheel Shield	Thrust out the wheel and give it a good spin, shredding enemies with the outer lining of spikes.
Wolf Leap	Old Wolf Curved Sword	Slice into foes with a large spinning motion, then leap out of harm's way and follow with strong attack.
Wolf Sword	Wolf Knight's Greatsword	While in stance, use normal attack for a low spinning slash, or strong attack to leap forward in a vertically-slashing somersault.
Wrath of the Gods	Wolnir's Holy Sword	Thrust weapon into earth to emit powerful shockwave.

Tools
Overview

Tools are usable items, and an indispensable part of your arsenal. The majority of basic consumable items in the game can be purchased from vendors in Firelink Shrine (typically the Shrine Handmaid, occasionally Greirat after he has unlocked some additional items). There are a few special purpose reusable items with various unique effects as well. All of these items are extremely useful for your survival, giving you the ability to protect and recover from the untender ministrations of Lothric's unwholesome denizens. Tools are accessible as the bottom part of your toolbelt, and you can store ten items on there, and another five on your main inventory status window for less commonly used items. Be careful about jamming your toolbelt too full of items you rarely use, it's usually a good idea to keep your Estus Flasks and a few consumables that are useful for the specific area you're exploring equipped. Otherwise you can find yourself fumbling for your flask in combat at a bad time!

Critical Items

These vital items are crucial for your survival. The Estus and Ashen Estus Flasks allow you to restore your HP and FP, while Embers restore you to full health should you perish, restoring your lost HP.

Estus Shards and Undead Bone Shards are rare items that upgrade your Estus Flasks, giving you more uses, and more powerful uses respectively. Keep an eye out for these on the maps throughout the walkthrough. If you can sneak ahead to pick these up even if you aren't prepared for another area fully yet, do so!

Estus Flask

Fill with Estus at bonfire. Restores HP.

The Undead treasure these dull green flasks.Fill with Estus at bonfires, and drink to restore HP.The journey of an Undead has always traced the bonfires, and no journey of import has been made without an Estus Flask.

Ember

Gain strength of flame, boosting HP until death.

No Unkindled can ever truly claim the embers that burn within a champion's bosom, which is precisely what makes their yearning for warmth so keen.Gain the strength of flame and increased max HP until death.With the strength of fire, the summoning signs of Unkindled become visible, and seekers of embers can be summoned to join in co-operation. But beware, the embers may also attract invaders.

Effect: Gain 30% HP and can use White Phantom signs, and host co-op or be invaded in multiplayer.

Ashen Estus Flask

Fill with Ash Estus at bonfire. Restores FP

Undead treasure these dull ashen flasks.Fill with Estus at bonfires, and drink to restore FP.Quite befitting of an Unkindled, an Ashen Estus Flask turns a bonfire's heat cold.

Estus Shard

Increases usages of Estus Flask

A shard soaked in Estus.Give to the blacksmith at the shrine to increases usages of the Estus Flask.In the old days, it was rare to see an Estus Flask far from its owner, but this shard offers hope, however shattered.

Undead Bone Shard

Burn in shrine bonfire to increase Estus recovery

Undead bones that yet burn.Cast it into the shrine bonfire to boost the recovery provided by the Estus Flask.The bonfire's cinders are the bones of Undead, and a bone that still burns is a fresh cinder indeed. Before feeding upon death, one must first pray to it.

Permanent Items

Permanent items are re-usable items with specific special effects. The Darksign is a special permanent 'item' (really a cursed brand on your body!) that allows you to instantly return to a Bonfire, at the cost of losing all of your Souls. Generally you should be carrying a decent sized stack of Homeward Bone items for this purpose, until you acquire the Coiled Sword Fragment later in the game. The Dragon Torso and Head stones can only be used while not wearing armor.

Coiled Sword Fragment

Return to last bonfire rested at, or to shrine

Fragment of the coiled sword of a bonfire which served its purpose long ago.Returns caster to last bonfire used for resting, or to the bonfire in Firelink Shrine. Can be used repeatedly.Bonfires are linked to one another irreversibly, retaining their affinity long after their purpose is exhausted.

Loretta's Bone

Old human bone with several holes bored into it

Old, discolored human bone with several holes bored into it.A woman's corpse in the Undead Settlement was found clutching this bone. Her name was Loretta.

Dragon Torso Stone

Gain dragon torso and roar like a dragon

Stone imbued with the power of the everlasting dragons, used in a secret rite by dragon worshippers.Gain the torso of a dragon and a dragon's roar, a transformation that is irreversible until death.From ancient times, the path of dragon worship was walked by warriors. It is said they envision Archdragon Peak in the depths of their meditation, and at times, they even hear the distant sound of the great bell at the peak.

Effect: Shockwave can repel some projectiles. Boosts weapon damage by 10% for 7 seconds.

Binoculars

Use to peer at distant scenery

Binoculars made of brass.Use to peer at distant scenery.Their utility is singular, but applications many. The value of these specs depends greatly on the imagination of their owner.

Dragon Head Stone

Gain dragon head and emit dragon breath

Stone imbued with the power of the everlasting dragons, used in a secret rite by dragon worshippers.Gain the head of a dragon and emit dragon breath, a transformation that is irreversible until death.Those who choose the path of the dragon strive for perfect imitation, and the dragon head rite is the first step in this grand process.

Scaling: Intelligence D, Faith C

Twinkling Dragon Head Stone

Gain dragon head and breathe until death

Stone imbued with the power of the everlasting dragons, the second of its kind, offered to a towering dragon.Gain the head of a dragon and emit breath alongside an archdragon mirage. The transformation is irreversible until death.The illusion achieved was the first case of a human imitating the form of an ancient dragon, and it revealed the smallness of human existence. The road to the old dragons is long and arduous, and only one can complete the journey.

Effect: Stronger than Dragon Head, drains more Stamina. Scaling: Intelligence D, Faith C

Twinkling Dragon Torso Stone

Gain dragon torso and roar until death

Stone imbued with the power of the everlasting dragons, offered to a towering dragon. This stone shows signs of a nascent light.Gain the torso of a dragon and roar alongside an archdragon mirage. The transformation is irreversible until death.Yet true imitation will require a dragon head, as well.

Effect: Does not repel projectiles like Dragon Torso. Boosts weapon damage by 10% for 7 seconds.

Trophy

Basic Consumable Souls

Found throughout the lands of Lothric, these condensed souls can be used to gain a quantity of Souls, useful for 'storing' Souls. Because they are items, they are not lost on death, so you can carry these and use them when necessary. A good time to use them is when you are just short of gaining a level. Using a few soul items at a time to completely drain your Soul pool before going out exploring again is a great practice.

Boss Souls

Powerful souls, typically found by defeating the powerful bosses in the game. After defeating the Cursed Greatwood in the Undead Settlement, you find the Transposition Kin. Given to Ludleth in the Foxhills Shrine, this allows him to create Soul Items from souls you collect. Soul Items are used to upgrade your weapons and to purchase certain items. Souls are usually weapons, but sometimes spells or magic. You can also use these souls to gain Souls, but doing so is usually a waste unless you are for into multiple playthroughs and no longer need the weapons or spells! One special note here, the Twin Princes souls provide two different swords that can be combined by Ludleth... which means the only way to do this is complete the game twice to acquire both blades!

Covenant Items

Items specific to the various multiplayer Covenants in the game, turning these in to their respective Covenant leaders allows you to acquire special rewards. These are earned by completing multiplayer tasks that suit your Covenant, whether cooperative boss defeats, defending against invading red spirits, winning duels, or slaying hosts or blue spirits.

Sunlight Medal

Medal received for victory in co-op

A medal received by members of the Warrior of Sunlight covenant for victory over the final foe when summoned. The summoner also gains the same medal.The medal, engraved with the holy symbol of the sun, is slightly warm, and reminds one of the great honor of a shared victory.

Proof of a Concord Well Kept

Proof a dark spirit was felled by a Blue Sentinel

Distinguished proof that one has hunted the enemies of the gods, as per the ancient accord with the Way of Blue.The layered ear of a dark spirit is the mark of a particularly guilty offender, one who has flagrantly violated one god or another.Only acquired by defeating an Aldrich Faithful as a Blue Phantom. Use to acquire two Proofs of a Concord Kept.

Forked Pale Tongue

Proves a blue spirit has been fended off

Proof that a red eye orb invader successfully fended off a blue spirit.Those who hunt dark spirits take the names of gods in ancient accord with the Way of Blue, a deception exemplified by their forked tongues.Use to acquire two Pale Tongues.

Wolf's Blood Swordgrass

Proves a Watchdog of Farron has met their duty

A leaf signifying a duty fulfilled by the Watchdogs of Farron, who stand beside the old wolf to ensure the serenity of those at rest. Depicts a swordgrass leaf stained with dried blood.Long ago, the swordgrass leaf quietly identified members of the Undead Legion. In the rotted forest rest the spirits of warriors past, their acceptance of and gratitude toward their guardians is expressed eloquently by the humble leaf.

Proof of a Concord Kept

Proof a dark spirit was felled by a Blue Sentinel

Blood-drained, shrunken ear. Souvenir taken for subduing the guilty.The knights called the Blades of the Darkmoon punish the guilt-soaked offenders of the Gods and take this as proof of their conquest. The earless corpses of the guilty will be left behind as a warning to others, inspiring both fear and respect for the Gods. Such is the eternal mandate of the Dark Sun.

Pale Tongue

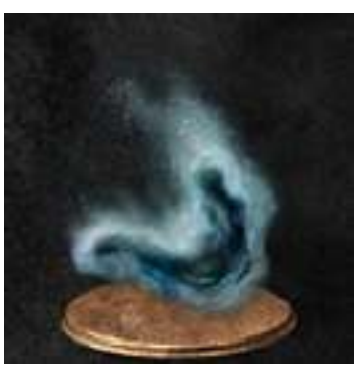
Proof of invader's victory over a Host of Embers

Proof of a red orb invader's victory over a Host of Embers.Claiming tongues as trophies was originally the practice of an infamous troupe of invaders, who offered them to their speechless goddess.

Vertebra Shackle

Special bone found by killing in other worlds

A special bone collected by members of the covenant of Mound-makers, discovered in the corpses of their victims.Only one such bone is found in the vertebrae, and the Mound-makers believe it to be a shackle of the gods. In their minds, each victim is another connection, an addition to the family.



Human Dregs

Proves an Aldrich Faithful has met their duty

Proof of a duty fulfilled by the Aldrich Faithful, who patiently await the Devourer of Gods' return.Dregs are the heaviest things within the human body, and will sink to the lowest depths imaginable, where they become the shackles that bind this world.

Special Items

A handful of special items, mostly focused on multiplayer interactions. The White and Red Soapstones allow you to engage in cooperative or voluntary PvP play, while the Red Eye Orbs allow for PvP invasions. The Seed of a Giant Tree is a special item that can help to defend against invaders, by causing all monsters in the area to react to the invading phantom and attack it! You can find these Seeds dropped by the Giant Tree just outside the Firelink Shrine every now and then. And no, there is no special use for the Pendant, long time Souls veterans may remember similarly charming accessories in previous games...

White Sign Soapstone

Leave white co-op summon sign

Online play item. Create a co-op summon sign.Be summoned to another world as a phantom through your sign, and defeat the area boss to gain the strength of flame.The nature of Lothric is murky, unclear. The White Sign Soapstone allows Unkindled to assist one another.

Black Separation Crystal

Banish visiting phantom, or return home

A charm of farewell granted to banished Undead. The crystal sends phantoms back to their homes, or you back to yours.Beware of fickle use of this item if you intend to nurture relations.

Red Sign Soapstone

Leave red antagonising invasion sign

Online play item. Create a hostile red invasion sign.Be summoned to another world as a dark spirit, and defeat the Host of Embers to gain the strength of fire.Not all dark spirits are unsporting, or they wouldn't make use of this soapstone.

Cracked Red Eye Orb

Consume to invade another world

Online play item. Allows a single invasion of another world.Defeat the Host of Embers of the world you have invaded to gain the strength of fire.The Cracked Red Orb is far from perfect, it seems, as Ringfinger Leonhard knows all too well.

Red Eye Orb

Invade other worlds at will

Online play item. Invade other worlds at will.Defeat the Host of Embers of the world you have invaded to gain the strength of fire.The Red Eye Orb is rooted in a tiny land swallowed by darkness long ago. Some choose to put the orb to other uses. To embark on this path, enter the service of Rosaria in the Cathedral of the Deep.

Dried Finger

Should only be used with the greatest of caution

Online play item. Dried finger with multiple knuckles.Use to strengthen connection to other worlds, allowing the summoning of a third phantom, but also a second dark spirit.Also makes the summoning of a dark spirit occur earlier. Use with caution.

Way of White Circlet

Restore the link to other worlds

Online play item. Restore the connection to other worlds.Those who engage in unjust deeds when in contact with other worlds will lose their connection to them.Way of White Circlets assume such sin as their own, but are found few and far between. Acting without honor will never be without risk.Repeatedly disconnecting from online sessions blocks you from using online play. Use this item to restore your connectivity. A new one only reappears about twice a day, so don't abuse disconnects!

Pendant

No effect

This faintly warm medal, engraved with the symbol of the Sun, is the ultimate honor, awarded to show who summon the Warrior of Sunlight and complete a goal.The symbol represents Lord Gwyn's firstborn, who lost his deity status and was expunged from the annals. But the old God of War still watches closely over his warriors.

Black Eye Orb

Invade the world of Rosalia's killer

Arcane orb left on Rosalia's corpse.Have faith her soul can be retrieved, by invading the world of her killer, and returning victorious.The Black Eye is proof of vengeance, but often appears serene as it casts its gaze toward Irithyll.

Seed of a Giant Tree

Enemies react to invaders

Makes enemies react to invaders.The giant trees were also known as watcher trees, and their seeds unmask invaders.When used effectively, these seeds will help counter dark spirits.

Knight Register

Displays online list of Darkmoon Knights

Online play item. A roster of knights of the Darkmoon who have served since the age of the old Royals.Use to discover the names of Darkmoon Knights, an order of elite knights shrouded in shadows.

Materials

Overview

Materials are used to improve your weapons at the Blacksmith. There are two types of upgrades you can do, Enhancement, which increases their stats (up to +5 for special weapons, up to +10 for normal ones), and Infusion, which allows you to apply a special Gem that grants unique effects to the weapon.

Dark Souls™ III & ©BANDAI NAMCO Entertainment Inc. / ©2011-2016 FromSoftware, Inc.

Materials

Enhancement

Enhancement is done with one of three different materials: pure Titanite (Shards, Large Shards, and Chunks), Twinkling Titanite (for unique weapons), and Titanite Scales (for special weapons created from powerful Souls). To reach the maximum level on any item requires a rare Titanite Slab.

It takes 12 basic Titanite for each set of +3 levels, finishing with a Titanite Slab for a total of 36 Titanite of three tiers to reach +9. Twinkling and Scale weapons require 15 of their respective type to reach +4. All weapons require a Titanite Slab to reach max level, be it +10 or +5.

Because Twinkling and Scale weapons are so expensive to upgrade to +4 with a rare material, consider upgrading a few that you enjoy using to +3 instead, and saving the +4 and +5 upgrades for a single weapon you really enjoy using.

Reinforcing a shield has little impact on its defensive attributes, except for Stability, which gains about a point per level. This isn't a great amount, but in a lot of cases, you're going to be using your shield for the majority of the game, so there's no reason not to squeeze every little bit of defensive utility out of it as you can. When you have the Titanite to spare, upgrade your shield to boost its Stability.

Titanite

Normal Item Level	Titanite Required
+1	2 Titanite Shards
+2	4 Titanite Shards
+3	6 Titanite Shards
+4	2 Large Titanite Shards
+5	4 Large Titanite Shards
+6	6 Large Titanite Shards
+7	2 Titanite Chunks
+8	4 Titanite Chunks
+9	6 Titanite Chunks
+10	Titanite Slab

Titanite Scales (Special Weapons)

Soul-transposed Item Level	Titanite Scales Required
+1	1 Titanite Scale
+2	2 Titanite Scales
+3	4 Titanite Scales
+4	8 Titanite Scales
+5	Titanite Slab

Weapons
Infusion

Infusion uses one of fifteen different special Gems to infuse a mundane weapon with a special attribute. The effects vary from elemental damage, to the ability to drain life from your enemies (how much benefit they get from a high level of Str or Dex for example) to adding elemental damage, or even Poison or Blood.

There is also a special Gem that can be used to remove an infusion from a weapon; infusions are separate from enhancement, you can have a +7 Blessed weapon, remove the Blessed infusion and you will still have a +7 weapon. This allows you to change your infusions based on need, or simply to experiment with other options on a favored weapon.

Infusing Shields has an odd impact on their stats, you can very slightly boost one elemental resist, at the cost of weakening another one. This is rarely worth it, barring very rare cases where you want to block one specific high damage attack from a boss.

Infusing a shield with a Blessed or Simple Gem can be useful, as you regain HP or FP even with the shield on your back, once fist has handled setups.

Blessed Gem

Infuse to create blessed weapon

A gem of blessed Mythic Quenching known as a more neat to wants.

Infuse to create blessed weapons Special blessed weapons gradually restore HP and Sanity (average recovered) Fires Gains FaithScaling, deals 20% greater damage to corrupted undead (Deathless and the like), and heals HP slowly over time.

It's worthwhile to make at least one Blessed weapon for the Cathedral of Darkness, and the HP regen ability isn't just useful - if you're Bleeding or Poisoned, you can't heal with Estus, but you can still heal with this weapon. Also, the Sanity recovery is great for players who like summon help, and it's pretty decent for solo play in Chalice Dungeons.

Blood Gem

Infuse to create lacerating weapon

A gem of ghoulish Mythic Wrought Infuse Gems Used in infusion to create lacerating weapons Such weapons inflict lacerating damage with each successful attack.

Adds a Bleed effect to a weapon. If the weapon already has a Bleed effect, slightly increases the Bleed chance.Like other effects, Bleed builds gradually with each successful hit, and then applies all at once. Bleed is Physical damage, so it's affected by Physical defense and Resistance, but not by Absorption.

It's worthwhile to make at least one Bleed weapon for the Cathedral of Darkness, and the HP regen ability isn't just useful - if you're Bleeding or Poisoned, you can't heal with Estus, but you can still heal with this weapon. Also, the Sanity recovery is great for players who like summon help, and it's pretty decent for solo play in Chalice Dungeons.

Chaos Gem

Infuse to create chaos weapon

A gem of ghoulish Mythic Relics of Ranni scorched by the Chaos Flame Used in infusion to create chaos weapons Chaos weapons inflict fire damage, with a chance to build up Poison.

Adds Fire damage and gives each hit a chance to inflict Poison. Like Fire, Poison deals almost immediate damage, then goes to work using it's own pacing on enabling beauty in Humanity (or all forms of Vitality), and Poison always does full and Faith considerably.

Dark Gem

Infuse to create dark weapon

A gem of ghoulish Mythic Gem of indemnifies humanity Used in infusion to create dark weapons Dark weapons inflict dark damage, and scale with Dark.

Adds Dark damage and hits the weapon scale with Dark. Essentially like Miracle caster analog of the Crystal Gem, this gives you a scaling add to Dark damage, and scales with Dark.

Fire Gem

Infuse to create fire weapon

A gem of ghoulish Mythic Wrought Infuse Gems Used in infusion to create fire weapons Fire weapons inflict fire damage, but Resistance can help.

Also found in Dung Cleric, but watching Fire-wielder Cleric Darkmoon Guide is the Cathedral of Darkness for Damage making this a safe place where for a safe support to Sunbro Fire Gem Lightning Gem Gem, Fire, or Dark, or Fire Damage weapon, see [Blue Cathedral Knight

Welcome to

Weapon Enhancement and Infusion Examples

To demonstrate the effect of infusion on weapon stats, we've included the next 2 smoke Long Swords. Each will have every different Gem in the game at minimum (+0) and maximum enhancement (+20), and at Sun Affinity and levels +1, +5, every rank, 20, 40, and 60.

This should give you a feel for the impact of enhancement, infusion, and attributes on a common weapon. Because weapon stats can be extremely complex, we'll be using the Long Sword as a baseline. Its stats are relatively straightforward and it's one of the most common weapons in the game, which should make it ideal for someone without a ton of previous attribute build.

In general, the non-scaling and single-attribute infusions are best on your first playthrough, while the more demanding scaling and multi-attribute infusions don't kick in at the end of a playthrough, or when you receive a new Divine Pact Artifact.

Weapons that have different beginning scaling attributes respond slightly differently to the infusions that affect attributes. Let's look at the Long Sword as a general example. We'll be using Strength and Dexterity.

Enhancement Example 1

Weapon	Attack Power (p)	Attack Power (m)	Attack Power (f)	Attack Power (d)	Attack Power (l)	Attack Power (p)	Strength/Dexterity Scaling

Weapon Reinforcement Explained

Now that you know how scaling works in a general sense, how do you use that information in a practical way? To help answer that, we've put together a couple of examples of how to use the Long Sword to your advantage. Let's start with Strength, knowing the properties of the Gold-tracer Long Sword (+0) and the Gold-tracer Long Sword +10.

The stats below show the final values of weapons when they're leveled +1 (All reinforcement points). In the case of a weapon with Twinning Thrust or Thrust Guard, it's a stat we've chosen because the base attribute of the weapon type, you'll find that the bonus for weapons is similar regardless of that skill point. Thus, items that say +0.149 gain that bonus when they're leveled +1. Items that say +0.298 gain that bonus when they're leveled +2, and so on.

Spells

Overview

Magic is an entirely optional part of the game, but it is very useful, and even melee focused characters can get a lot of return out of a few points put towards Int, Faith, or both.

Unless you're intentionally challenging yourself with a specific character concept, it's a good idea to make use of as many spells as you are able—while straight offensive magic tends to be less useful without a lot of points invested, supportive and healing magic is extremely helpful for any character.

Just because you're a brute with 40 Strength doesn't mean you can't heal up between fights with a bit of magic!

Using spells is as simple as equipping a proper Catalyst and attuning spells at a Bonfire. Staffs are used for Sorcery, the Pyromancy Flame for Pyromancy, and a Talisman for Miracles.

You can equip a Catalyst in one of your secondary slots and swap to it as needed. If you are playing an actual combat caster, you probably want to keep it in your main hand so you can still use a shield. If you're mostly using out of combat support magic, it's usually safe to swap out your shield or one-hand your giant weapon for a moment.

You do add on a bit of extra weight to use a Catalyst, but it's a small price to pay for the benefits. Much like ranged combat, spells are another facet of your character's power that you would do well to take full advantage of!

Unlocking Magic

If you begin the game as a background with a magical history, you start with access to a Catalyst for your respective magic type and a basic spell.

Otherwise, you gain access to all three types of magic when you reach the Undead Settlement, not far into the game.

There are three NPCs there that offer to join and serve you, and if you accept, all three appear in the Firelink Shrine.

Each teaches a different type of magic, and as you explore the world, you can find special items that unlock new spells.

There are a few other spell trainers in the game, one found in the Road of Sacrifices, one in the Irithyll Dungeon, and one who appears in Firelink Shrine if you use Draw Out True Strength five times from Yoel of Londor.

Your faithful companion from start to finish, a good solid melee weapon is vital to success in Dark Souls III. There are a huge number of weapons to be discovered out in the world. Some can be found while exploring, some come from enemies, others can be created using Soul Transposition, a special process of creating items from powerful Souls by the NPC Ludleth in the Firelink Shrine.

The Blacksmith in town is also important for your weapons, as he can upgrade their power, and for mundane weapons, infuse them with special Gems to give them new abilities.

The majority of melee weapons require some level of Str or Dex to equip and use effectively, though there are are also weapons that require Int or Faith (sometimes 3 or even all 4 attributes!).

At the beginning of each weapon category is a chart showing a breakdown of every weapon in the game in that category. You can see a weapon's name, it's damage type, what skill it possesses and how much that skill costs to use in FP, and its weight.

The Power column shows you the base power of a weapon, with short abbreviations in the comparison table for damage type, p for Physical, m for Magic, f for Fire, l for Lightning, d for Dark, and finally for weapons that have a non standard Critical value above 100, c for Critical. For the few weapons that can act as Catalysts for spells and have the Spell Buff stat, this is also shown as sb.

The Additional Effect column indicates if a weapon has any Bleed, Poison, or the rare Frost damage (b, po, f r), while the Scaling and Requirements columns are both ordered as Str/Dex/Int/Faith. Scaling indicates how much a weapon benefits from a high attribute level, ranked from E on the low end to S at the highest. Weapon scaling improves as you enhance a weapon at the Blacksmith.

Finally the Material column shows what type of Titanite a weapon requires to be enhanced. Normal mundane weapons only require 'normal' Titanite, and reach reach an enhancement level of +10, while unique Soulbound weaponry requires rare Twinkling Titanite, and Soul-transposed weaponry requires even rarer Titanite Scales, both upgradable to +5. Neither Soulbound nor Soul-transposed weapons can be infused by the Blacksmith, the price you pay for their inherent power.

Weapon Bonus Damage

A rare few weapons deal bonus damage to certain enemy types, summarized in this table.

Dagger

Daggers are weapons characterized by a short, sharp blade intended for thrusting or stabbing. They are usually designed with a pointed tip and two sharp edges, although some daggers have only one edge. Daggers are typically shorter than swords and are often used as secondary weapons or for close-quarters combat.

Daggers have been used throughout history and in various cultures around the world. They have been found in ancient civilizations such as Egypt, Greece, and Rome, as well as in more modern times. They can be made from a variety of materials, including metal, bone, and wood.

In the Soulsborne Dagger series, the dagger is a weapon that can be used in either the left or right hand. It is a fast weapon that can be used to perform quick attacks and combos. The dagger can also be used to backstab enemies, dealing extra damage when attacking from behind. The dagger is a versatile weapon that can be used in a variety of situations.

Great Swords

Wielding a great sword requires a minimum Strength and Dexterity. Each Great Sword has its own attributes, ranging from slow and powerful to fast and agile.

Some Great Swords, like the Lothric Knight Sword, are designed to be used with a shield in the off hand. Others, like the Black Knight Sword, are designed to be used two-handed. Two-handing a great sword increases the damage dealt by the weapon.

There are only two skills that Great Swords can be equipped with, Sweeping Strike, and Whirlwind Slash. Sweeping Strike is a fast, wide sweeping attack that can hit multiple enemies at once. Whirlwind Slash can be performed while moving.

Occasionally, Great Swords will have a Special Effect. Some Special Effects, such as the Silvers Knight Set, Pontiff Sunlight Set, and Dragonslayer Set, are unique to the weapon. Others, such as Poison, Bleed, and Fire, can be applied to any weapon.

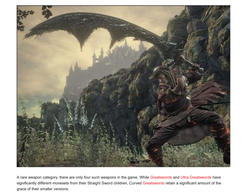
Curved Greatswords



A rare weapon category, there are only four such weapons in the game. While Greatswords and Ultra Greatswords have significantly different movesets from their Straight Sword children, Curved Greatswords retain a significant amount of the grace of their smaller versions.

Curved Greatswords still require a healthy attribute investment however, demanding both Str and Dex to use, and with moderate weight requirements. Three of them share the Spin Slash skill, while the fourth makes use of a leaping strike that emulates the Abyss Watcher's graceful fighting style.

If you want a larger weapon but don't enjoy the movesets on Greatswords, try a Curved Greatsword and see if it suits your playstyle.

Weapon Movesets

Thrusting Swords

Dedicated fencer's weapons. Thrusting Swords focus on rapid piercing strikes. Almost a dagger in sword form, these are fast, lightweight weapons. They mix skills from Daggers and Straight Swords, giving you access to Stance and Shield Spiritual Ash, granting an easy way around shielded opponents.

Dexterity is favored for a thrusting sword, but Strength is also important. Almost a dagger in sword form, these are fast, lightweight weapons. They mix skills from Daggers and Straight Swords, giving you access to Stance and Shield Spiritual Ash, granting an easy way around shielded opponents.

Bleed's Scythe is notable for having a unique skill that attacks with a very rapid flurry of blows. Enchant it with poisons or enchantment spells to start heavy elemental build damage.

If you favor Dagger's speed but want a bit more punch on each hit, try a Thrusting Sword.

Unique blades, Katanas posses their own stance fighting style, both in boosted and in weapon mode. They like sometimes, have a Heavy Attack Combo, Light Attack Combo, Charged Attack, Special Attack and Guard Break. Katanas can be used by selecting the Heavy Katana Finisher and Katana Finisher Mod. You can also pick up a fallen blade.

Katanas make use of swift slicing moves, good for dealing with multiple opponents or fighting in the open. Inside its case is a small whetstone, which Kaidan uses to keep the strength of a katana at Mid-tier, giving them Medium to Mid case damage potential. Against Shield Users, Katanas are Mid-tier.

Katanas are also notable for being one of the first reasons a weapons that have incredibly burst dps enough that you can essentially burst an assembly in a single swing (Not all Katanas, but a couple of them). Lacks Ranged Finisher, but Ranged Katana Finisher Mod can be used to compensate for it. Katanas are Mid-tier in Ranged Combat.

Melee Weapons

Greataxes

Heavy and powerful, Greataxes have intense DS requirements to even wield them, on top of hefty weights that demand even more attributes investment to use them effectively.

With common access to Ritems, those weapons can potentially be even harder than a Greatsword of equivalent upgrade level. If you can handle one without demerits of anyone else's skills.

Axion Hammers

The Axion Prime Hammers' Skeleton can be found in the Void Cores (VC) variant (with some metal detailing), however, it is predominantly seen as its Exclusive, in Corpus Ship Defense mode (CSD), with additional metal detailing and gold. No Void Cores (VC) variant exists.

Axion Hammers are Melee Weapons. Hammers hits with speed and impact, and are unsuited to hit the Weakspot. Hammers are Exclusive to CSD, and VC. Some Hammers can be found in Void Cores (VC).

The Skeleton Hammer and the Hammers are another possible choice for a low-ranked void mod. You can easily find one in Relic Vaults or by grind. An experienced MR should not take this one at all, really.

Hammers

Hammers are heavy weapons that require a high Strength stat to wield effectively. Most hammers can be used with a shield in the left hand.

Dex stat bonus: Many hammers have a bonus applied to their attack power based on the character's Dexterity. Typically, the bonus is applied to the thrusting damage of the weapon, but some hammers have a bonus applied to other damage types instead.

Str stat bonus: Some hammers have a bonus applied to their attack power based on the character's Strength. Typically, the bonus is applied to the slashing damage of the weapon, but some hammers have a bonus applied to other damage types instead.

Weapons are the primary offensive tools in Dark Souls III. Each weapon has its own unique moveset, and can be upgraded to increase its damage output. Weapons can be found throughout the world, purchased from merchants, or crafted using materials found in the world.

Weapons can be upgraded at the Blacksmith using Titanite. Each weapon has a maximum upgrade level, and the amount of Titanite required to upgrade it increases with each level. Weapons can also be infused with different elements, such as Fire, Lightning, or Dark, which can be upgraded using Twinkling Titanite.

Melee Weapons
Pikes

Spears taken to the extreme, Pikes have the greatest reach in the game, with suitably increased attribute requirements and weight.

All three have the Charge skill, and all three can be used to poke and stab your enemies from long range. If you really enjoy the keepaway style of play that Spears promote, give Pikes a try once you have the attributes to use them effectively.

GREATLANCE

This lance features a long pole, and was originally intended to be used by knights for jousting.

This weapon is primarily used in charging attacks, and would require tremendous strength and dexterity to be handled by a mere foot soldier.

Skill: Charge

Hold lance at waist and charge at foe. Use strong attack while charging to extend the length of the charge.

LOTHRIC KNIGHT LONG SPEAR

Long spear wielded by the proud Lothric Knights. Designed for long-range thrusting.

Lothric spear knights are known for their steadfastness, and this spear boosts the poise of its wielder.

Skill: Charge

Hold spear at waist and charge at foe. Use strong attack while charging to extend the length of the charge.

PIKE

Long spear with a very long hilt. Designed for long-range thrusting.

Has the longest range of the non-projectile weapons, but its very length makes it unwieldy in certain situations.

Skill: Charge

Hold spear at waist and charge at foe. Use strong attack while charging to extend distance.

Including the Lord Knight Greatsword and its upgrade, Obtained after the boss of Sanctum Hill in the Pharloah Mountains.

Additional sword moves have been added including defensive counterstrike, momentum weights, and an advanced move set. All of which are unique to the Lord Knight Greatsword.

Similar to the Lord Blade, the Lord Knight Greatsword can be buffed with the Pharloah Sign for Faith, and has the ability to unleash a Sword Art. The Sword Art knocks back and ripples the ground in front of the user. Effective only when the sword is buffed with the Pharloah Sign. Consumes 30 FP. Requires 20 Faith and 20 Strength.

Requires the Pyro Flame Magic Ring. Also works with Lightning Arc Magic Ring and the Sanctum Sword Ring.

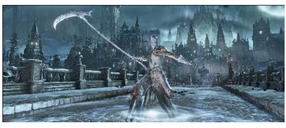
Melee Weapons
Reapers



The rare Reaper weapons offer the best mix of reach and sweeping, area of effect swings. Appropriately, they are ideal for scything down weaker foes in groups.

Reapers take a decent level of both Str and Dex to use and are midweight weapons that can be tough to use in enclosed spaces, so they aren't a great early-game choice, but as a mid or late-game tool, they can be useful as an alternate weapon to deal with certain areas and enemy combinations. Their Neck Swipe skill is a hard hitting and fairly low cost move, and you can dish out either Bleed or Frost status effects.

GREAT SCYTHE

Attacks with this large scythe, normally used for crop harvesting, are effective at breaking past shields.

The magnificent sharp curved blade instills fear in opponents. Perhaps it is their survival instinct at work.

Skill: Neck Swipe

This attack aims for the scruff of a foe's neck, and when successful, functions as a head shot, inflicting heavy damage.

Unusual weapons all around, Whips require high Dex to use, but have light weight and quick strikes. They can also deal Bleed or Poison damage, and the Impact move gives them a means of bypassing shields and damaging Stamina recovery.

This makes Whips an interesting choice for PvP players, and they can be a viable alternative to Daggers, Curved Swords, or Thrusting Swords if none of those suit your Dex build tastes.

Melee Weapons

Fists

For when you really want to get up close and personal, Fist weapons give you some extra pounding power on your hands. Fists are all inherently dual-wieldable weapons, giving you a weapon in each hand and a dual wield attack moveset.

Fists have extremely limited reach, but they do have the benefit of low weight and rapid strikes, making them a viable option against smaller enemies and humanoid foes. They can be considerably harder to use against truly massive enemies or bosses that are extremely dangerous to stay in close proximity with.

Weapon that allows its wielder to evoke an art unique to Londor, the land of the Hollow. It is also said to be an ancient relic of a Primordial Serpent.

The Dark Hand mercilessly saps the essence of its victims, and can also double as a special shield.

Cannot be used two-handed.

Claws

Similar to Fists in that they are both dual-wieldable weapons, Claws give an edge to your close quarters combat strikes. They require fairly high Dex to use, but both offer Bleed effects and skills that give rapid mobility in combat.

If you're really dead set on a fisticuffs concept character, you can go with Fists with a Str focus, or Claws if you're leaning towards Dex.

CLAW

Weapon favored by intelligencers of an eastern land. The lacerations it inflicts do not mend easily.

When two-handed, claws are equipped to each hand.

Skill: Leaping Slash

Perform a forward leaping slash at the opponent's head. When successful, functions as a head shot, inflicting heavy damage.

Ranged Weapons
Overview

Ranged Weapons comprise Bows and Crossbows, with the special Greatbows mixed in.

Ranged weaponry gives your character the ability to strike foes from a distance, and this is extremely useful and powerful in many parts of the game. It is very easy to neglect ranged weapons, skipping them entirely or rarely using them. Don’t do this if you’re a new player!

Pulling enemies apart with a bow can make tough encounters manageable, and some difficult encounters or enemies can be outright defeated without ever engaging them with sufficient arrows.

Very early in the game, you can buy an unlimited amount of arrows or bolts cheaply. Take advantage of this. As you progress, you unlock new and more powerful types of ammunition, and combined with the right stats and an upgraded bow, this can allow you to inflict considerable damage from a distance.

For veteran players, some of the bow skills may be of interest, giving bows an extra option in combat.

Ranged Weapons

Bows

Bows boast require a light investment in stats, with the Short Bow, Composite Bow, and Longbow all being reasonable options early in the game. The rare bows require a heavier investment in Dex of 50-54 to be used, making them more available for builds already planning on raising these attributes.

For natural players, the Regal Fire skill at the Composite and Short Bows may be of particular interest. It allows you to fire a flaming arrow at the cost of 10 Focus, which can be useful for quick clearing of large groups of lightly or melee range. The free PvP implications, but also gives you the real option of fighting with a bow in close quarters shields alongside your melee weapon, which can be very handy against some enemy types.

BLACK BOW OF PHARIS

A black longbow named after a hero of old. Known for the unusual stance from which it is fired.

Has a longer range than standard bows, but successful usage requires a trained, dexterous hand.

Skill: Pharis Triple-shot

Ranged Weapons

Greatbows

Massive, heavy bows with demanding attribute requirements, Greatbows typically cannot be used until later in a playthrough.

They require specialized ammunition, and are slow to wield and fire. Best used as an alpha strike against distant foes, or for landing hits on truly massive targets while they are disengaged from you, Greatbows are a poor choice for general combat, but they can come in handy against certain big game targets.

DRAGONSLAYER GREATBOW

Greatbow used by the Dragonslayers during the age of gods. Far greater in size than any normal bow, and far more devastating.

The bow must be anchored to the ground when fired, a time-consuming operation that leaves the user vulnerable. Only specialized great arrows can be fired from the bow.

Forged Weapons

Crossbows

Crossbows offer a ranged option for characters unintended in heavily investing in Dex, as they have no inherent skill scaling and can be used to quickly fire efficient shots.

This makes them a good choice for using skills to combat to pepper enemies with attacks even when they back off, and for interrupting spellcasting (in fact usage, in the case of other players in NPC pharisme trying to drink Estus).

Crossbows only have a basic Tackle skill, lacking the dedicated ranged skills of the other types.

Catalysts
Overview

Catalysts are required for spellcasting, with Staffs used for Sorceries, Talismans for Miracles, and the Pyromancy Flame for Pyromancies.

Catalysts give a Spell Buff stat, boosting your spell damage or healing output. Different catalysts offer different types of attribute scaling, and different base levels of Spell Buff (there are a few rare weapons that act as Catalysts, see the melee weapons for more info on those).

Dark Souls™ III & ©BANDAI NAMCO Entertainment Inc. / ©2011-2016 FromSoftware, Inc.

Wielding Pyromancy staves, which are built with the Pyromancy Flame and reinforced primarily with Fire damage, deals extraordinary fire damage.

Pyromancy staves are relatively scarce, making only the top of a quartet offered, but some pack more than one bonus. Like all staves, they are equipped with a single hand, and can be wielded using the second hand.

Staff	Type	Attribute	Weight	Physical	Magic	Fire	Lightning	Requirements	Bonuses

Catalysts

Pyromancy Flame

There's only one choice for Pyromancies, but the Pyromancy Flame does have the benefit of having a naturally higher base Spell Buff level, and upgrading it at the Pyromancy trainer increases its base power even more.

This makes Pyromancies a solid choice as an offensive magic for characters who may not want to invest heavily in Int or Faith.

While you still need to raise both Int and Faith to use high powered Pyromancy spells, there are a decent number of options for even a dabbler. The Pyromancy Flame itself comes with the Combustion spell 'built-in' as its skill, a good spell for a melee fighter.

Pyromancy Flame	Type	Art/Cost	Weight	Power	Spell Buff	Scaling	Requirements	Material

PYROMANCY FLAME

Flame catalyst used by pyromancers.

Equip a pyromancy flame to utilize pyromancy. Pyromancies must be attuned at a bonfire before use.

Skill: Combustion

Creates a powerful flame in the wielder's hand. One of the most basic pyromancies, and for this very reason, the flame created is fierce. Works while equipped in either hand.

Shields are a vital defensive tool in Dark Souls. They are particularly important for new players, giving you a much needed wall to hold against the many foes that seek to take you down. As players grow in experience and master dodging (and sometimes parrying), hiding behind a shield becomes less necessary, but they still remain useful tools, trivializing many commonplace enemy encounters throughout the game, and still serving to protect you well against quite a few dangerous boss attacks. Remember that you can swap a shield on and off your back by two handing your weapon, allowing you to use large weapons, inflict some extra damage with typical one handers, or even use dual-wield weapons in concert with a shield. With some effort, it is even possible to make use of shields as weapons, using the Shield Bash skill to smack your foes in the face.

Many shields provide either the Parry or the Weapon Skill ability. Parry grants you the ability to intercept incoming attacks and counter them, and the Weapon Skill ability let you make use of the skill of your right hand weapon while retaining your ability to block with a shield. Remember that while blocking, your Stamina regen rate is lowered, so try not to keep your shield up at all times! Block when necessary, dodge roll away from truly hard hits.

Shields are defined by their defenses, and a shield with 100% physical damage block should be one of your earliest goals as a new player. High elemental resistances are rarely necessary, but they can prove useful against certain bosses who have dangerous attacks of a specific element. Finally, the Stability value on shields is important, as it determines how well you can block extremely heavy hits. As it scales almost exactly with shield weight and size, it is generally only Greatshields that have a chance of successfully blocking the hardest blows in the game. Any shield can have its Stability value (slightly) improved by enhancing it at the Blacksmith. Infusing mundane shields with an element very slightly boosts that single elemental defense, at the cost of lowering all others. Rarely a worthwhile upgrade, again barring specific use cases against certain boss attacks.

Infusing a shield with a Blessed or Simple Gem allows you to regenerate HP or FP, even while the shield is on your back!

Armor
Overview

Your final line of defense against the blades and fangs of this dark world, armor provides protection against physical and elemental damage, and resistance to status effects. Armor's defensive benefits stack with those provided by your personal stats, so as you level, you naturally take less damage overall, though a suit of heavy plate will always provide more raw physical reduction than a dress!

Armor in Dark Souls is largely about tradeoffs between weight and protection. Any suit of armor is viable throughout the game, as lightweight armor leaves you nimble enough to dodge most incoming attacks, while heavy armor lets you absorb more damage directly. The Poise value on armor is important, as it provides protection from flinching when you take damage during an attack. High Poise allows you to ignore harder hits, and Poise is particularly important for avoiding stunlocks from multiple rapid enemy attacks, and for ensuring that your slow and hard hitting swings find their target.

Because you can change armor at any time, think of your armor as a situation-specific tool to help you get through areas. Facing the poisonous swamp? Stock up on high poison resist armor. Heading into the depths of the Smouldering Lake? Fire resistance can come in handy. Up against a boss with lethal magic attacks? You know what to do. In general, lighter armor tends to have higher elemental defense, and heavier armor better physical defense, while status effect resistance varies across many armor pieces. You can usually get away with ignoring status resistance attributes, excepting Curse (which is extremely deadly in the few areas that have Curse inflicting enemies), if you bring along enough curative items. However it's usually pretty easy to find a mix of armor pieces that have similar weight to what you normally wear and provide extra resists suitable for an area, so if you're exploring an area with a lot of Bleed inflicting foes, its worth taking a few moments to swap some gear around. A rare few armor pieces (often helms) provide some unique effects, check their in-game descriptions as you acquire new armor.

There is no one single 'best' suit of armor, as much depends on the weight your stats will allow and how much speed you personally prefer, so feel free to mix and match individual pieces as you see fit. And of course, we won't judge if you choose to play a bit of Fashion Souls, looking sharp is important for the undead...

Special Armor Sets

Some full armor sets are not found or dropped anywhere in the game, instead they are sold by the Shrine Handmaid in Firelink Shrine. They are unlocked after either defeating a boss, or after completing an NPC questline. A few NPC armor sets can only be acquired by killing that specific NPC!

For special armor that is sold by the Shrine Handmaid, you must complete the conditions for her to sell it on each playthrough. If you start a New Game Plus journey, she won't sell any of the 'reward' armor until you complete the task again in that playthrough.

Armor

Pharis's Set

Broad-brimmed leather hat. Traditionally used by master archers, and especially favored by forest-dwelling hunters.

The name Pharis is said to have once belonged to a hero, but is now more widely known as a style of hat.

Armor made of smooth leather. Even lighter and more flexible than most leather armors.

Found/Dropped: Greirat, Helm: Farron Keep

Armor

Hard Leather Set

A sturdy helm made of iron. Used by warriors of old, but one can still expect sound defense.

It is never unwise to wear a sturdy form of head protection against arrows and other somatic threats.

Armor made of thick, layered leather. Used by warriors of old, but one can still expect sound defense.

Armor

Lucatiel Set

Mask attached to a ceremonial hat.

A Hollow once fought valiantly with this mask, but feared the fading of her self, and implored a comrade to remember her name.

Perhaps that is why this gentleman's mask is named after a woman.

Garb worn by Mirrah Knights sent on journeys. This hard leather vest is bestowed only upon proven knights.

Knights travel afar to fulfill their sacred duties, but few are ever able to deliver on their vows.

Armor

Creighton Set

Attire of Creighton the Wanderer, a notorious deserter who fled an order of Mirrah Knights.

Despite the mask's being a symbol of a criminal sentenced to death, Creighton never removed it.

Formal attire of the honorable knights of Mirrah, featuring their heraldry, a stag set against a blue field.

Oddly, it was a dishonorable deserter who wore this attire most religiously.

Armor
Iron Set

Large, durable iron helm, known as a heaume.

This helm with a red feather is said to have belonged to a Knight of Sunlight in a previous age.

The heaume has no particular powers, but is of fine quality, and appears to have been looked after with the greatest of care.

Chainmail armor and white coat featuring a large rendition of the holy symbol of the sun.

The choice attire of a singular Knight of Sunlight from a previous age. The symbol was painted by the knight himself, but the armor never bore any special power, sacred or otherwise.

Armor
Drang Set

Armor of the Drang Knights, proclaimed descendants from the land known for the legend of the Linking of the Fire.

Fine protection that is both light and strong, having been reinforced with rare geisteel.

The Drang Knights were once feared sellswords, until treason meant descending into the abyss, and they were separated forever.

Found/Dropped: Cathedral of the Deep

Armor

Alva Set

Protection of Alva, seeker of the spurned. This steel body armor was trimmed to reduce weight.

To this day, troubadours sing of tales of the wandering knight Alva and his travels, and of his involvement with the saint and the witch. Needless to say, the songs traditionally end in tragedy.

Armor

Drakeblood Set

Armor of the Drakeblood Knights, worshippers of the blood of dragons. The red cloth is said to symbolize their yearning for blood.

Dragon worship has captured the hearts and minds of warriors across the lands for many ages. Perhaps such warriors are attracted to doctrines of few words.

Found/Dropped: After getting the Drakeblood Greatsword, return to the area where you learn Path of the Dragon. The Drakeblood Set will appear there (near Oceiros' Bonfire).

Favor Set

Helm of the pitiable Embraced knight. Depicts the affection of the goddess Fina.

Adrift on a sea of isolation, only his faith in the love of his goddess remained true, and so the knight forsook all else.

Armor of the pitiable Embraced knight. Depicts the affection of the goddess Fina.

The face is crafted to depict the goddess's embrace, quite ignoring the fact that her love is in fact as fickle as the weather.

Armor

Eastern Set

Distinctive armor made in an Eastern land.

The exquisite craftsmanship and artistic design made these prized pieces in the collection of any nobleman.

Offers excellent damage absorption, particularly from slashing attacks from katanas, which are commonly encountered threats in battles fought in the East.

Armor

Morne Set

Unusual helm bestowed upon knights of Carim.

Modeled on Morne, the Archbishop's apostle, the helm is of perfect likeness to the stone heads lining the cathedral.

A Carim knight will dedicate an entire career to attending a single maiden, just as Morne once served one goddess alone.

Black armor bestowed upon knights of Carim.

Modeled on Morne, the Archbishop's apostle, cast from a unique mineral resembling stone.

Found/Dropped: Shrine Handmaid (after Eygon's death)

Armor

Wolf Knight Set

Armor of a knight tainted by the dark of the Abyss. The twilight blue cape is damp, and will ever remain so.

A vanquished knight left behind only wolf's blood, and his legacy of duty. The Undead Legion of Farron was formed to bear his torch, and the armor of these Abyss Watchers suggests their own eventual end.

Armor
Lorian Set

Armor of Prince Lothric's older brother Lorian.

This black-dyed brass armor was passed down to him from the royal family.

Lorian, raised as a knight, is said to have been left mute and crippled by his younger brother's curse. It is also said that Lorian, in fact, wished it so.

Armor

Firelink Set

Armor of the Soul of Cinder, a deific manifestation of the Lords of Cinder, who linked the First Flame.

It resembles a knight's armor, but bears hideous burns and contortions, taking the shape of a deathly ribcage.

It exists as a symbol of the great Lords and the noble act of linking the fire, though it is no more than an empty husk.

Armor
Exile Set

Armor of the watchdogs of Farron's Keep.

After the Legion's Watchers became Lords of Cinder, the wolf blood dried up, and Farron was consumed by a festering wood.

Within the wood, an emaciated old wolf commands watchdogs to defend the sanctity of sleeping warriors.

Both the exiles were surely watchdogs themselves, for Farron has always been a land of itinerants.

Armor

Leonhard Set

Silver mask of Ringfinger Leonhard.

In his youth, Leonhard suffered grave burns to his entire body. His face in particular, which he hid beneath his mask, was terribly scalded.

He abstained from restoring these injuries, even after becoming a Finger of Rosaria.

Garb of Ringfinger Leonhard.

Leonhard was born into royalty, which is believed to be the reason for his skill in both sorcery and swordsmanship.

Indeed, this dingy garb is in fact embroidered with gold thread, betraying its purpose as military wear designed for a noble.

Pale Shade Set

Gold mask worn by those who kill in the name of the Sable Church of Londor.

A faint, kindly smile is bound to its surface, giving them the moniker Harlots of Death.

What lies beneath that expression, however, is nothing more than the face of a darkly shriveled Hollow.

Attire worn by those who kill in the name of the Sable Church of Londor.

The Pale Shades of the Sable Church are all undying Hollows, giving rise to much fear and contempt.

Their fight is one of neither honor nor exaltation, yielding nothing but withered moans.

Black Set

Attire of the three mentors of the Sable Church of Londor, this billed mask belongs to Yuria, the second eldest.

These maidens of a Primordial Serpent were renowned as founders of the Sable Church, which offered salvation for Hollows.

Attire of the three mentors of the Sable Church of Londor, this pitch-black dress resembles a mourning dress.

It is apparent that the women in black were highly skilled fencers, capable of founding the Sable Church between just the three of them.

Arrows & Bolts
Overview

Ammunition for your ranged weapons.You can find very small quantities out in the world as you explore. For the rest, you can purchase it from the Shrine Handmaid or Grierat. As you offer the Handmaid more Ashes and as Greirat explores the world, both unlock the ability to sell new types of ammo. A good bow and a stack of arrows can solve a lot of problems from a distance.

Arrows & Bolts

Arrows

Used for all types of regular bow, the different arrow types give you access to Dark, Fire, and Magic damage, as well as ranged Poisoning capability.

Arrow Types

Arrows	Category	Type	Power	Add. Effect
Dark Arrow	Arrow	Thrust	65d	-
Feather Arrow	Arrow	Thrust	40p	-
Fire Arrow	Arrow	Thrust	25p/40f	-
Large Arrow	Arrow	Thrust	55p	-
Moonlight Arrow	Arrow	Thrust	75m	-
Poison Arrow	Arrow	Thrust	10p	30po
Standard Arrow	Arrow	Thrust	30p	-
Wood Arrow	Arrow	Thrust	30p	-

Dark Arrow

Ritual arrows said to have been used by savage hunters.

Inflict dark damage.

It is said that these arrows scrape out death from their targets, but savages are known to tell tall tales.

Feather Arrow

Red feathered arrows used by hunters.

Their long range makes them ideal for distant targets.

Simultaneously equip up to two types of arrows, and switch between them as needed.

Fire Arrow

Shoot arrows with burning tips dealing fire damage.

Simultaneously equip up to two types of arrows, and switch between them as needed.

Large Arrow

Large, more powerful arrows with a shorter range due to their weight.

Simultaneously equip up to two types of arrows, and switch between them as needed.

Moonlight Arrow

Magical arrows said to have been used by the Darkmoon Knights.

Imbued with a silver light, these arrows inflict magic damage.

It is said that long ago the God of the Darkmoon Gwyndolin wielded these arrows with a matching golden bow.

Poison Arrow

Arrows with poisoned tips.

Inflict poison damage that gradually wears down foes.

Standard Arrow

Standard arrows used with bows.

Simultaneously equip up to two types of arrows, and switch between them as needed.

Wood Arrow

Inexpensive wooden arrows.

Weaker arrows that can be easily purchased in bulk.

Simultaneously equip up to two types of arrows, and switch between them as needed.

Arrows & Bolts

GreatArrows

Specific to the massive Greatbows, these huge arrows are almost miniature spears.

Greatarrows
Greatarrow Name	Category	Type	Power	Add. Effect
Dragonslayer Greatarrow	Greatarrow	Thrust	90p	-
Dragonslayer Lightning Arrow	Greatarrow	Thrust	90l	-
Onislayer Greatarrow	Greatarrow	Thrust	60p	-

Dragonslayer Greatarrow

Large spear-like arrows created by the giant blacksmith of the gods.

Can only be used with greatbows.

These large arrows were said to have been used by dragon hunters during the age of the gods. Easily pierces human flesh.

Dragonslayer Lightning Arrow

Large spear-like arrows enveloped in lightning created by the giant blacksmith of the gods.

Can only be used with greatbows.

Lightning has been a weapon of dragonslayers ever since the time of Gwyn, the First Lord.

Onislayer Greatarrow

Large arrows used to destroy giant horned oni in an eastern land.

Can only be used with greatbows.

Made from the feathers of an aged crow, it is said that these arrows fly as straight as their master.

Arrows & Bolts

Bolts

Used in all types of crossbows, Bolts can deal Fire or Lightning damage, and inflict Bleeding from a distance.

Bolts

Bolt Name	Category	Type	Power	Add. Effect
Exploding Bolt	Bolt	Thrust	140f	-
Heavy Bolt	Bolt	Thrust	64p	-
Lightning Bolt	Bolt	Thrust	110l	-
Sniper Bolt	Bolt	Thrust	53p	-
Splintering Bolt	Bolt	Thrust	20p	7bl
Standard Bolt	Bolt	Thrust	48p	-
Wood Bolt	Bolt	Thrust	38p	-

Exploding Bolt

Bolts that explode on impact. Deals area fire damage in the immediate vicinity.

Due to the risk of detonation, the amount of bolts the user can carry is greatly limited.

These are, after all, prototypes created by the weapon craftsman Edmond. You get what you pay for.

Heavy Bolt

Large, more powerful bolts with a shorter range due to their weight.

Simultaneously equip up to two types of bolts, and switch between them as needed.

Lightning Bolt

Bolts imbued with lightning created by the giant blacksmith of the gods.

However, the gods never used crossbows.

These bolts are likely artifacts of the dragonless era, when the pact between gods and humans was upheld.

Sniper Bolt

Red feathered bolts used by snipers of Carim.

Their long range makes them ideal for distant targets.

Though typically used with Sniper Crossbows in Carim, these arrows can still be used with any kind of crossbow.

Splintering Bolt

Bolts that explode immediately after being shot.

Makes unusual shots possible, and releases splinters that cause immense bleeding.

Standard Bolt

Standard bolts used with crossbows.

Simultaneously equip up to two types of bolts, and switch between them as needed.

Wood Bolt

Inexpensive wooden bolts.

Weaker bolts that can be easily purchased in bulk.

Simultaneously equip up to two types of bolts, and switch between them as needed.

The Bestiary
Overview

While exploring the beautiful world of Dark Souls III is a pleasure, it is the monstrous foes you encounter that bring the pain.

From the lowliest undead dreg to the most massive boss encounters, every enemy in the game is capable of sending you to your grave time and again. Learn each foe, and you can overcome what feels like an insurmountable challenge at first.

The beasts you face are gathered in this chapter, grouped by the area that they appear in. Some enemies do reside in more than one location, and there are some variant enemies that behave in the same way, but they are simply tougher and more damaging when encountered later in the game.

Should you travel on to New Game Plus, all of the foes in the game become stronger, so make sure you are well prepared before you complete the game, if you plan to travel onward!

Combat Notes

As a rule, we assume you are tackling the game your first time as a generalist—you have a one handed weapon and a shield, a ranged weapon, access to at least basic spellcasting, and some early low requirement spells.

If you are choosing to play through with a two-handed weapon or dual wielding, much of the advice still applies, but when we're discussing shield blocking tactics, you're going to be relying more on your dodge roll to avoid incoming damage.

You can block with a weapon, but weapons always have worse block ratings than shields, and critically, without 100% physical absorption, you're always going to take damage when you block with a weapon.

If you see no other option to avoid an incoming blow when using a two-hander (or dual wielding), go ahead and block, but otherwise, stick to dodging!

If you are choosing to play without a ranged weapon or any magic, understand you are choosing to make the game more difficult. It's certainly possible (and even enjoyable to experiment with once you're experienced), but we definitely don't recommend doing so for your first playthrough.

Enemy Data Notes

Many of the enemies encountered throughout the world of Dark Souls III have basic variations, typically common humanoid foes wielding different weapons. Likewise, enemies may be encountered in multiple areas, and they are usually tougher when encountered later in the game (and usually drop a few more Souls in recompense).

Red-eyed versions of some foes behave identically to their normal counterparts, but they are tougher to take down.

In almost all cases, if there are variants of a humanoid foe that uses multiple weapons, it has a chance to drop whatever weapon it is wielding.

In cases where there are many variants of a common foe (such as the Hollow Soldier), we list their "most complete" drop list, and variants wearing/using less gear have less drops.

In each area, any new enemy type is described; enemies from previous areas are shown in the data table.

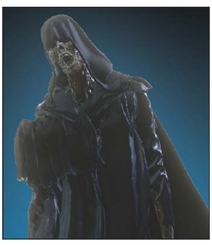
Grave Warden



The most basic humanoid foes in the game, these poor souls are other cursed undead who have lost all of their humanity. Most wander aimlessly, some stand idly in place. These sad souls are pitiable, but do not mistake their often passive demeanor as reason to treat them carelessly.

Roused from their stupor, they can lash out and deal heavy damage if you let them past your guard. Keep a sturdy shield between you and their attacks, or dodge when they charge and go for a fatal backstab to finish them quickly.

These undead have been carefully placed as an early game tutorial lesson in basic combat against humanoids, use the opportunity to practice if you are new to the game!

Starved Hound

Don't underestimate these emaciated undead hounds. They are lethally fast, and can quickly flank you and break your guard. They are often encountered in packs later in the game, and it is very easy to get overwhelmed and killed if you stumble into a group of them.

Starved Hound attacks don't have a lot of punch individually, so if you can keep them at bay by blocking with a shield, they're fairly easy to dispatch—just watch your flanks and don't let them surround you.

If you do get rushed, dodge roll away repeatedly and get some distance. If you can make them come at you while you're on elevated terrain, it restricts their movements, and they're a lot easier to handle.

When encountered later in the game in packs, if at all possible, try to pull them (or kill them!) from a distance with ranged attacks. You really don't want these dogs ambushing you in unfavorable terrain (or worse still, with other foes nearby).

Dealing With Dogs

I hate dogs in Dark Souls. Seriously. Love the real ones, but not these undead beasts.

I've suffered an embarrassing number of deaths to dog packs across the various Souls games over the years. Don't be like me, treat them with respect.

Ravenous Crystal Lizard

These rare foes are apparently an evolved form of Crystal Lizards, and the only ready source of Titanite Scales in the game until much later on, when you can buy them from the Shrine Handmaid, or loot them from Rock Lizards in Archdragon Peak. Scales (and only Scales) are used to upgrade specific special weapons.

Unlike most enemies, Ravenous Crystal Lizards do not respawn after they are slain. They are the larger, angrier version of Crystal Lizards who simply flee when encountered.

Ravenous Crystal Lizards have a fairly nasty arsenal of attacks, and they are your first real encounter with a non-humanoid foe. Learning its tells can be tricky at first—if you don't mind dying a few times, it is well worth it to engage this foe and let it attack you at close range and a distance—it is good training for learning to read non-humanoid attacks, a very useful skill that will come in handy.

Ravenous Crystal Lizards move quickly and can close distance rapidly with lunging and sweeping attacks that cover a lot of ground. Blocking all of their attacks with low Stamina or a weak shield is inadvisable, and they are an excellent foe to learn dodge timing against.

Because you encounter this dangerous foe literally at the beginning of the game, don't hesitate to move on if you find it too difficult to defeat—you can always return later!

If you stock up on a few thrown weapon consumables (or you have access to offensive magic), Ravenous Crystal Lizards make good targets if you're not comfortable mixing it up in melee.

When encountered later in the game, you usually want to actively seek these out and defeat them for their material drops.

Crystal Lizard

These tiny glimmering lizards are covered in a shell of precious stones. If you manage to kill one, its load of Titanite is yours!

Crystal Lizards are a special sort of Dark Souls enemy—when approached, they instantly begin to flee, and if you do not defeat them quickly, they vanish entirely!

They do reappear after a reload or zone warp, so you can return to try again with a different weapon should you miss one (not an uncommon occurrence if you accidentally stumble across one unprepared).

You may want to carry around a weapon (even unequipped) that has a good sweeping downward strike. Because Crystal Lizards are so small, large slow weapons or precise weapons such as spears or thrusting swords can be really awkward to use against them.

Also be sure to try different attack types—a sprinting strong strike or standing two handed strong strike with some weapons may work best, or some quick weapons with good downward arcs can get away with sprinting at the critter and mashing weak attacks rapidly.

Crystal Lizards drop different chunks of Titanite depending on where you kill them, but they are all useful, especially early in the game. Later when you have a range of Gems for infusion, they are a luxury, but early on, they can provide you access to valuable infusions for your weapons, setting you on the path to success with a strong upgraded weapon that suits your build's stats.

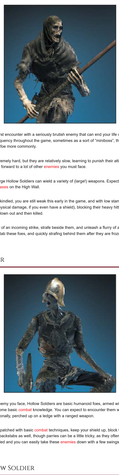
There are multiple Hollow Soldier types in High Wall (and elsewhere); this table lists the 'most complete' drop variant; the lesser equipped types have less drops.*

The Starved Hounds here are likely to engage you with other humanoid undead foes nearby. Try to pull them away and deal with them first; you really don't want them tearing at your heels while you're fighting other undead.*

Large Hollow Soldier



Most likely, this will be your first encounter with a seriously brutish enemy that can end your life quickly. This archetype of foe is encountered with some frequency throughout the game, sometimes as a sort of "miniboss", though later in the game you can expect to find this sort of foe more commonly.

Large Hollow Soldiers hit extremely hard, but they are relatively slow, learning to punish their attacks when they overextend is a valuable lesson that carries forward to a lot of other enemies you must face.

Like most humanoid foes, Large Hollow Soldiers can wield a variety of (large!) weapons. Expect wide sweeping strikes and blows from halberds or large axes on the High Wall.

As a fresh-from-the-grave Undead, you are still weak this early in the game, and with low stamina (and possibly a shield that doesn't block 100% of physical damage, if you even have a shield), blocking their heavy hitting attacks repeatedly is a good way to get your guard blown out and then killed.

It's safer to roll out of the way of an incoming strike, skate beside them, and unleash a flurry of attacks, then back off and repeat. It is possible to backstab these foes, and quickly strafing behind them after they are frozen from a heavy swing is an effective tactic.

Hollow Soldier

The most "normal" undead enemy you face, Hollow Soldiers are basic humanoid foes, armed with poorly preserved equipment and possessing worse than basic combat knowledge. You can expect to encounter them with single weapons, a weapon and shield, or occasionally, perched up on a ledge with a ranged weapon.

These enemies are easily dispatched with basic combat techniques, keep your shield up, block their weak hits, and retaliate. Most are very susceptible to backstabs as well, though parries can be a little tricky, as they often attack with flurries of weak swings. Avoid being surrounded and you can easily take these enemies down with a few swings even with early un-upgraded weapons.

Praying Hollow Soldier

More a sad commentary on the state of undead existence than actual foe, Praying Hollow Soldiers appear along the walls of Lothric and in a few other places throughout the land.

Focused on praying rather than fighting you, they can often be ignored completely, as few bother to rouse themselves from their activity to attack.

If they do attack, they behave much like the early Grave Wardens, furiously lunging with weak weaponry, with little in the way of martial discipline.

Lothric Knight

Your first highly trained humanoid opposition, these Lothric Knights are very dangerous, so don't be too surprised if you end up running back from a Bonfire after engaging a battle with one. Lothric Knights are challenging foes, as they mix controlled aggression with a solid defense.

Lothric Knights are armed with suits of sturdy armor, a stout shield, and a weapon with which they are considerably proficient.

Basic combat tactics of blocking and strafing around them work, but Lothric Knights are wise to your attempts to backstab them, and will quickly pivot in place while lashing out with their shield to fend you off.

On top of that, if you persist in crowding behind a shield, they can switch from their shield to two handing their sword, and performing a lunging strike that will blow out your guard if it connects.

Lothric Knights are very vulnerable to parry; because their attacks are clearly telegraphed, if you can muster up the courage to attempt a parry on their initial swings, you can punish their tells with a powerful counterattack.

Otherwise, if you are really struggling in melee, mix up your approach—bypass them entirely by running, pick them off from a distance with a bow, or bring a stack of firebombs and burn them down.

Hollow Assassin

These foul assassins present a danger mostly because of their ambush tactics, not as much their sustained durability in combat. Typically armed with light daggers and throwing knives, they are often hidden in the shadows in room corners or shadowed alcoves. If you spot them early by moving carefully, you can ruthlessly their greatest strength; surprise.

In combat, Hollow Assassins attack with vicious flurries of blows, but they can be defended fairly easily by blocking, and they are both fairly weak defensively, and quite vulnerable to backstabs or parries. If you try to keep your distance from them for too long, they can throw knives at you, though this is rarely a serious threat.

Pus Of Man

Exploding from the bodies of unfortunate undead, this consuming chaos corruption manifests itself as an amorphous black blob, vaguely resembling some horribly beset in silhouette, but with no recognizable shape.

The Pus of Man moves relatively slowly until it attacks, but when it does strike, it hits hard, and has surging and sweeping melee strikes that can be hard to evade.

Very early in the game, you are best served either avoiding these entirely, or dispatching them swiftly with some spare firebombs, which they are quite vulnerable to.

It is possible to block and counter against them, but because they hit hard, you may find your stamina sapped swiftly. They can drop Titanite Shards and Embers, which makes for appealing loot, just be aware of the danger!

Winged Knight

Another lesson in the virtue of avoidance, the Winged Knight is an enemy normally encountered much later in the game. Tough and powerful, it can dispatch you with speed when you find encounter it.

Like the Dragon, if you do insist on engaging the Winged Knight, you are best served by attacking it from a distance and taking it down slowly but safely.

If you engage up close, you need to deal with wide sweeping swings from its halberd, a spinning attack that covers a lot of ground, crushing vertical strikes with great reach, and just to top it all off, blasts of magic that incinerate the area around it when it goes off. If you get touched by any of the white aftera it rolls down).

This enemy can be deflected in a straight light, but it's a tough battle, so make sure you have the nearby Bonfire or shortcuts unlocked before you decide to tangle with it!

Dragon

A classic Dark Souls tradition, throwing a dragon in your face this early in the game seems quite cruel, but it mostly serves as a lesson in avoiding dangerous threats… and archery.

The Dragon can be dispatched by means of a bow, and a small sum of Souls spent buying arrows. If you aren't planning on dispatching it with ranged attacks, avoid it entirely!

The dragon located here coats part of the wall with flames should you attempt to venture past it, but it is possible to skip it via a side path.

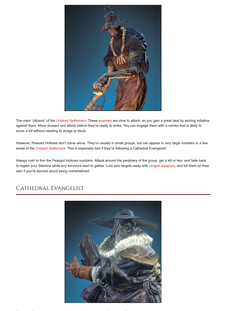
Pleasant Hollow

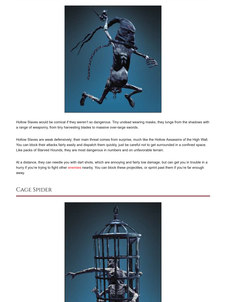


The main "citizens" of the Undead Settlement. These enemies are slow to attack, so you gain a great deal by seeking initiative against them. Brave forward and attack before they're ready to strike. You can engage them with a combo that is likely to score a hit without needing to dodge or block.

However, Pleasant Hollows don't come alone. They're usually in small groups, but can appear in very large numbers in a few areas of the Undead Settlement. This is especially true if they're following a Cathedral Evangelist.

Always rush to the first Pleasant Hollows number. Attack around the periphery of the group, get a kill or two, and battle back to regain your Stamina while any survivors start to gather. Lure solo targets away with ranged weapons, and kill them on their own if you're worried about being overwhelmed.

Cathedral Evangelist

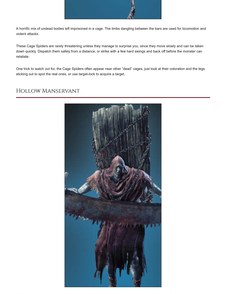


Cathedral Evangelists are religious leaders of the Undead Settlement. They have ranged magic and wide, sweeping melee attacks. Avoid their ranged attacks by dodging forward; the attacks track, but they can't turn around to hit you. As long as you roll away, but toward them, you're likely to avoid all of the damage.

The melee attacks are trickier. Although you see them from a mile away, it's still intimidating to dodge through these huge swings. One trick to help with this is to back away, bait the Cathedral Evangelist's spells, and then rush forward to get a free attack or two before they recover and you make morals.

Don't try to burn these heavier enemies down in a single go. Kill any support they have before you try to do any damage against the bigger threat, and then use hit and run combos to get free hits without exposing yourself.

Hollow Slave

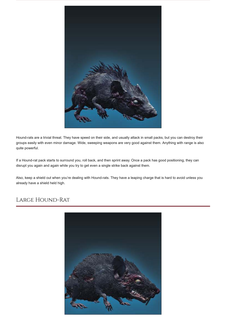


Hollow Slaves would be comical if they weren't so dangerous. Tiny undead wearing masks, they lunge from the shadows with a range of weaponry, from rusty knives to massive over-large swords.

Hollow Slaves are weak defensively; their main threat comes from surprise, much like the Hollow Assassins of the High Wall. You can block their attacks fairly easily and dispatch them quickly, just be careful not to get surrounded in a confined space. Late packs of Stained Hounds, they are most dangerous in numbers and an unfavorable terrain.

At a distance, they can rewrite you with dart shots, which are annoying and fairly low damage, but can get you in trouble in a hurry if you're trying to fight other enemies nearby. You can block these projectiles, or sprint past them if you're far enough away.

Cage Spider

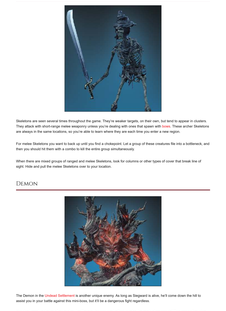


A horrific mix of undead bodies left imprisoned in a cage. The limbs dangling between the bars are used for locomotion and violent attacks.

Three Cage Spiders are rarely threatening unless they manage to surprise you, since they move slowly and can be taken down quickly. Dispatch them safely from a distance, or strike with a few hard swings and back off before the monster can retaliate.

One trick to watch out for: the Cage Spiders often appear near other "dead" cages, just lurk at their coloration and the legs sticking out to spot the real ones, or use target-lock to acquire a target.

Hollow Manservant

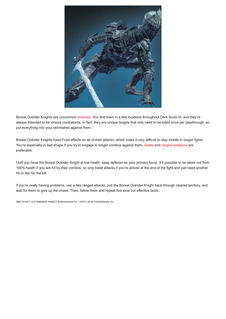


Hollow Manservants are large and mean. They either attack with their heavy axes or use slap pots. Both have the ability to knock down your character, leaving you exposed to additional strikes if you don't get up with a fast roll.

Always be cautious against Hollow Manservants. Bait their combos and punish them with two hits while they're recovering from their repeated strikes. It's better to retreat early, because these foes do massive damage and can kill you very quickly if you try to trade blows with them.

If any other targets are near a Hollow Manservant, make sure to turn them away with ranged attacks. You never want to fight these enemies while anything else is around to distract you.

Hound-Rat



Hound-rats are a trivial threat. They have speed on their side, and usually attack in small packs, but you can destroy their groups easily with even minor damage. Wide, sweeping weapons are very good against them. Anything with range is also quite powerful.

If a Hound-rat pack starts to surround you, roll back, and then sprint away. Once a pack has good positioning, they can disrupt you again and again while you try to get even a single strike back against them.

Also, keep a shield out when you're dealing with Hound-rats. They have a leaping charge that is hard to avoid unless you already have a shield held high.

Large Hound-Rat

Large Hound-rats are much worse than their smaller companions. They have higher health and give you plenty of Blood damage if you aren't careful. You can always put on items to increase your Blood Resistance, but that's not actually necessary. You're better off ambushing and killing Large Hound-rats before they're able to get many attacks against you. One extended combo is usually enough to get the job done.

Skeleton

Skeletons are seen several times throughout the game. They're weaker targets, on their own, but tend to appear in clusters. They attack with short-range melee weaponry unless you're dealing with ones that spawn with bows. Those archer Skeletons are always in the same locations, so you're able to learn where they are each time you enter a new region.

For melee Skeletons you want to back up until you find a choke point. Let a group of these creatures file into a bottleneck, and then you should fit them with a combo to kill the entire group simultaneously.

When there are mixed groups of ranged and melee Skeletons, look for columns or other types of cover that break line of sight. Hide and pull the melee Skeletons over to your location.

Demon

The Demon in the Undead Settlement is another unique enemy. As long as Stagnard is alive, he'll come down the hill to assist you in your battle against this mini-boss, but it'll be a dangerous fight regardless.

You don't need to dodge often against the Demon, but you can't afford to miss the mark when you do! This enemy has slow, but powerful attacks. Dodge to the side three times if you dodge too early, and hope that the timing works out well enough for the second dodge to avoid the hit.

You can get fairly greedy with your return combos after the Demon misses. Keep enough Stamina free to roll away from it, but otherwise go to town and get heavy damage while you can.

Boreal Outrider Knight

Boreal Outrider Knights are uncommon enemies. You find them in a few locations throughout Dark Souls II, and they're relatively easy to defeat with a few basic tactics. They are unique enemies that only need to be killed once per playthrough, so put everything into your skirmishes against them.

Boreal Outrider Knights have Frost effects on all of their attacks, which make it very difficult to stay inside or longer fights. You're especially in bad shape if you try to engage in longer combos against them. Spells and ranged weapons are preferable.

Until you have the Boreal Outrider Knight of raw health, keep defense as your primary focus. It's possible to be taken out from 100% health if you are hit by their combos, so only back attacks if you're almost at the end of the fight and just need another hit or two for the kill.

If you're really having problems, use a few ranged attacks, pull the Boreal Outrider Knight back through cleared territory, and wait for them to give up the chase. Then, follow them and repeat this slow but effective tactic.

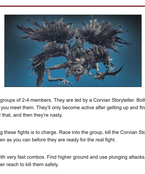
Corvian

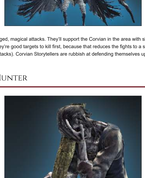


Corvians are usually in small groups of 2-4 members. They are led by a Corvian Storyteller. Both types of these enemies are vulnerable for a short time as you meet them. They'll only become active after getting up and finishing a transformation. Corvian become berserk after that, and then they're rarely.

The typical method for winning these fights is to charge. Race into the group, kill the Corvian Storyteller first if at all possible, then get as many Corvian down as you can before they are ready for the real fight.

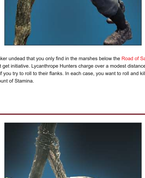
Once berserk, they'll attack with very fast combos. Find higher ground and use plunging attacks, ranged or thrown weapons, or melee weaponry with greater reach to kill them safely.

Corvian Storyteller



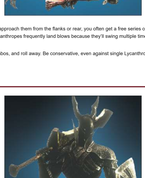
Corvian Storytellers have ranged, magical attacks. They'll support the Corvian in the area with slow but consistent shots from quite far away. This is why they're good targets to kill first, because that reduces the fights to a single type of enemy (Corvians only have melee attacks). Corvian Storytellers are rubbish at defending themselves up close.

Lycanthrope Hunter



Lycanthrope Hunters are weaker undead that you only find in the marshes below the Road of Sacrifices. Jump them for fast kills, but watch out if you can't get initiative. Lycanthrope Hunters charge over a modest distance with their melee attacks, and they can sweep to catch you if you try to roll to their flanks. In each case, you want to roll and kill them or block and retreat because you'll lose a fair amount of Stamina.

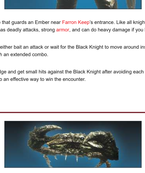
Lycanthrope



Lycanthropes are vile. If you approach them from the flanks or rear, you often get a free series of attacks before the fight starts. In a stand up fight, Lycanthropes frequently land blows because they'll swing multiple times.

Make single hits or small combos, and roll away. Be conservative, even against single Lycanthropes.

Black Knight

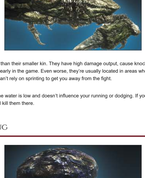


The Black Knight is a rare foe that guards an Ember near Farron Keep's entrance. Like all knights, you need to be focused when you face this target. It has deadly attacks, strong armor, and can do heavy damage if you leave yourself open.

Gather your full Stamina and either bait an attack or wait for the Black Knight to move around instead of standing still waiting for your strikes. Then, unleash an extended combo.

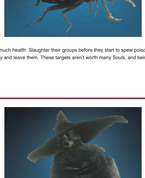
Alternatively, use parry or dodge and get small hits against the Black Knight after avoiding each attack. This takes time and requires precision, but it's also an effective way to win the encounter.

Lesser Crab



Lesser Crabs are small enemies that do trivial damage and can't take much of a beating. Don't let them distract you while you're handling greater threats.

Great Crab



Great Crabs are much worse than their smaller kin. They have high damage output, cause knock down very easily, and can't be comboed to death quickly early in the game. Even worse, they're usually located in areas where movement can be impeded by high water. You can't rely on sprinting to get you away from the fight.

Search for the areas where the water is low and doesn't influence your running or dodging. If you must fight Great Crabs, pull them to these safer spots and kill them there.

Poisonhorn Bug

Poisonhorn Bugs don't have much health. Slaughter their groups before they start to spew poison all over the place. If they unleash their clouds, run away and leave them. These targets aren't worth many Souls, and being poisoned always raises the risk of dying.

Sage's Devout

As you approach the Crystal Sage's area, you have to fight a few Sage's Devout; they have wonderful ranged attacks, but can't do much against an opponent who gets close to them. Sprint quickly to get through areas that are exposed to any Sage's Devout, and use pillars or walls to break line of sight so that they can't keep casting at you successfully.

Once you get a straight shot, sprint over to the Sage's Devout in question and use a full combo to bring them down immediately. Don't play the ranged game against these foes because it is slow and frustrating.

Ghru

Ghrus are the rank and file enemies of Farron Keep. Pull them over to dry land so that you aren't fighting in the middle of poisonous muck, and destroy them. You don't usually have to worry about large groups, so the land itself is your real problem in Farron Keep. Ghru can appear as normal melee foes, Conjurators, or occasionally as Mad Ghru that wildly lunge and attempt to tackle you bodily.

Elder Ghru

Elder Ghrus aren't seen often, but these massive evolved Ghru are dangerous. The slow, awkward footing of the area makes it really tough to avoid their attacks. The only good news is that they have less health than their size implies. Long combos or cautious ranged fire are both effective ways to kill these horrors.

It's a bad idea to take on a group of Elder Ghrus (exactly how they appear in a few places). Avoid this by shooting at maximum range to get the attention from one Elder Ghru and kill it separately.

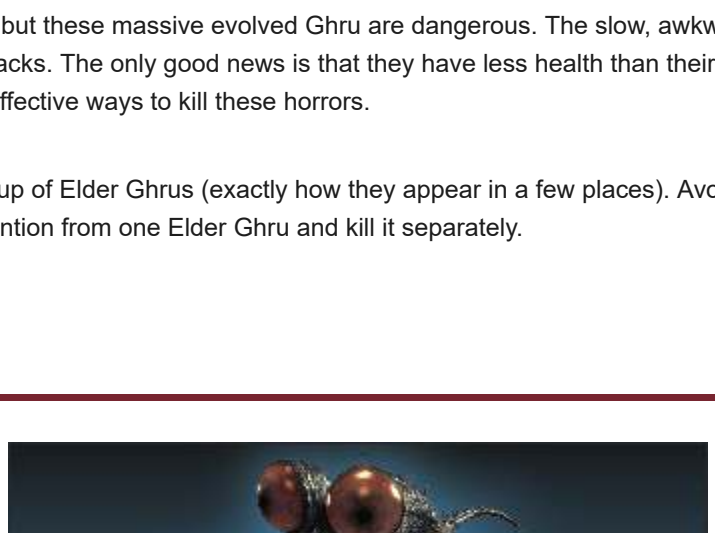
Basilisk

Returning players know exactly what to expect from Basilisks! Lacking normal attacks, these enemies either can't hurt you at all, or they'll kill you outright by breathing thick clouds of Cursing gas. Roll past them as they breathe, kill them from behind, and sprint away before their clouds of death kill you.

Curses

Don't mess with these cursing beasts. Either bring heavily Curse resistant armor, kill them from a distance, or avoid them entirely. Getting Cursed is not fun at all!

Rotten Slug



Rotten Slugs appear in large groups, but they're still a petty threat. Use sweeping weaponry to clear them out. Run away if you have any trouble; Rotten Slugs are quite slow, so they won't be able to pursue you in a meaningful way.

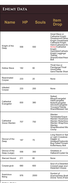
Devout Of The Deep



The Devout of the Deep are basic humanoid foes, much like Hollow Soldiers. Almost all of the tactics that you learn work well against them, but they serve as a distraction while you're also being attacked by more serious adversaries. Kill them while they're occupied and then Reanimate with Crackstone, at the altar of the undead who are lighting themselves at the Bonfire.

Reanimated Corpse

Reanimated Corpses are pathetic targets. They are only any danger at all because they cannot be killed for long, seeming, after falling. However, they exist in a major threat to you. Their attacks do minor damage and their health is poor. The only way they'll trouble you is by surviving forward to wear your progress when you're simply trying to run past them. Always assume that Reanimated Corpses have been reanimated, and snatch your hand if you're about to run past them. It doesn't take long for them to recover and stand back up.

Devout Bomber

Devout Bombers immolate themselves and vomit toward your direction. They'll throw themselves onto you and try to detonate. Through the kills them in the process. A basic variety of damage to you, if it happens.

If you see a Devout Bomber starting their fiery animation, attack them immediately. They're deflammables while they put themselves to the torch, and it isn't hard to do enough damage to kill them. They aren't explode.

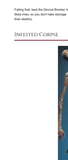
Failing that, lead them from shadow and afford stamina and then dodge-and-after the undead jumps into the air. They'll likely miss, so you don't take damage. Even better, their explosion takes out everything nearby (and you still get Souls for their deaths).

Infested Corpse

Infested Corpses are a worse form of Reanimated Corpses. They have a building creature of maggots bursting out of them. They're Reanimated Corpses with Rotten Flesh and Writhing Rotten Flesh in their inventory. They're also full of the Rotten maggot creatures in the area near the cathedral, so pulling an explosive specifically for this purpose is worth your time.

Infested Corpses have more health compared to Reanimated Corpses, and you need a very serious combo to kill them in a single run. Keep a shield out, look on, and back off as soon as the Infested Corpse rear up for a two-handed blow. You should be able to pace the full Ice backstepping. The barrow you will miss if Stamina will over for a little combo.

Corpse-Grub



Corpse-grubs are the worst of the maggoty bunch. They are larger, heavier, and meaner than the other two maggot-foes near the cathedral. They're also the only ones that can't be Reanimated. Instead, they'll emit they dedicate to their hideout attacks, and then you can push forward, look at the bones, and then retreat.

They overwhelming, because even a single hit promises high damage and enough Bleed effect to make things difficult. Bring cureitres.

Cathedral Grave Warden

Cathedral Grave Wardens aren't seen too often, and that's a good thing. They have medium-range attacks, fast melee attacks, and a Poison Cloud spell that they'll cast when you're close. Learn how much of their violence without losing all of your Stamina. Block, perform a short combo counter, and then fade back.

Writhing Rotten Flesh

Writhing Rotten Flesh is a disgusting slime that hangs on ceilings and attempt to ambush you from above. As long as you remember to look up, they're not much of a threat. After they fall, they attack slowly and each just to soak up damage.

The biggest problem with Writhing Rotten Flesh is that they block narrow hallways if you don't take the time to kill them. Remember that the path is blocked if you hurry forward, and don't try to retreat through when late on.

Knight Of The Deep

Knights of the Deep aren't always as defensive as other knights in the game, but they know how to rely on the damage. Some of their attacks are unblockable, and they'll use them to punish you if you're not careful. Learn their opening game. Use extended combos to knock aside their shields, and then get out damage in while they're briefly stunned.

The two-handed Knights of the Deep are damage dealers. Don't trade with them, because you are going to regret it (badly).

A nice trick against all Knight of the Deeps is to back off and bait their spells. They'll buff themselves when you're far away, but you have enough time to close and attack before they finish.

Deep Accursed

Deep Accursed are unique enemies. You meet one in the Cathedral of the Deep, and another later in [Anor Londo]. Both are large knights but had extremely intimidating. They have a Curse effect on their attacks, so any extended fighting can leave you in a difficult situation.

Therefore, take a more aggressive approach. Roll into the Deep Accursed and use long combos to deal maximum damage before they can retaliate. Their attacks are slow, so you should be able to stagger them with a few hits. Because these are unique monsters, you can learn to dive more close, return to a Bonfire, and then come swiftly through the area in the future.

Giant Slave

Giant Slaves are seen several times throughout the game. Most are unique (like the ones in the [Cathedral of the Deep]), but not all of them. Tougher weapons have a safe location are done but effective at killing Giant Slaves. However, going players should run under their feet and combo extensively to kill them. Don't get stepped on, and watch out for enemies that add to these fights, but the load-starting method is very reliable.

There are smaller Giant Slaves located in Irithyll Valley, they are slightly faster than their massive brethren.

Deacons Of The Deep

Deacons of the Deep are spellcasters with very long range. They rely on fire for damage, but have very weak melee attacks. Lock-ons knights that are protecting them away. All those dangerous regards, and then return for an easy slaughter. They're deflammables if taken on directly. Roll under their fire spells on your approach, and close to the fire kills.

Avaricious Being/Mimic

Avaricious Beings/Mimics are false treasure chests. You learn where they are as you explore, or you can use the map in the walkthrough chapter, but you can always check to see if a treasure chest is safe by swinging at it. Mimics only attack if you try to open them or if you go after them first. Take the initiative with a very long series of strikes, and try to kill the Mimic before it even stands up.

Roll backward if your combos doesn't finish the job, and try again in a few seconds. Mimics aren't very dangerous as long as you trigger them this way.

Man-Grub

Man-grubs are only seen near Rosaria chamber. They use ranged fire attacks and are a moderate threat because of their numbers. Attack their groups and back to break their line of sight. This lets you kill any of the members who follow.

Skeleton Swordsman

Skeleton Swordsmen are similar to Cathedral Grave Wardens. They have the health, combos, and range to kill you efficiently. Use a shield to blunt their initial attacks, and then counter with whatever Stamina you can afford to spend.

When you find Skeleton Swordsmen and regular Skeletons together, try to break line of sight and kill the targets as they close with you. They'll usually spread out a bit, and you won't be overwhelmed.

Skeleton Wheel

Skeleton Wheels roll toward you at a decent clip and then knock you around so that you can't get a returning shot against them. Dodging works a little, but it leaves you rather far away from the Skeleton Wheel. Instead, use a shield to block their charge. You stop the Skeleton Wheel much closer to your position, making it easier to close, attack, and kill the pesky foes.

Stay near walls when you're fighting Skeleton Wheels. They always lose momentum if they smack into a hard surface, so you're in better shape when you fight near these obstacles.

Return Of The Wheels

Few enemies in the game are as likely to cause instant loathing for Souls veterans as these seemingly straightforward skeletal foes.

Getting run over and smashed into a fine paste by their rolling attack is a rite of passage for Dark Souls players. If you're new, join us in death!

If you're not, you should know that they are a little less brutal this time around.

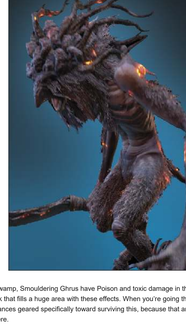
Demon Cleric

Demon Clerics are savage. A single one can be a serious problem, and any additional targets (whether Demon Clerics or Smouldering Ghrus) make them a very difficult encounter.

Take as much time as you need to pull everything else out of a Demon Cleric's room. Only attack after the enemy is fully isolated. Even then, you have to use walls to break line of sight any time that you need to heal or regain Stamina.

Melee combos get the job done, but it's always an ugly affair. You end up trading damage, so keep your supply of Estus Flasks high when you attack these monsters. After you've looted an Demon Cleric's room, consider sprinting through it in the future so that you don't spend so many resources every time you come through it.

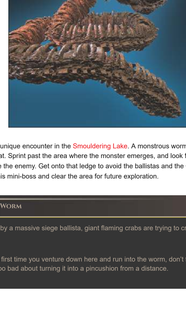
Smouldering Ghru



Cousins to the Ghru in the swamp, Smouldering Ghrus have Poison and toxic damage in their melee attacks, and their shamans have a cloud attack that fills a huge area with these effects. When you're going through the Smouldering Ghru's area, wear armor with resistances geared specifically toward surviving this, because that and the Demon Clerics' Fire are the easiest ways to die down there.

Smouldering Ghrus come in groups. Each target has modest health and can be killed quickly. You need to capitalize on that, because these guys are horrible once they've gathered together. Rush each Smouldering Ghru you see and destroy them immediately, even if you have to take a little damage.

Carthus Sandworm



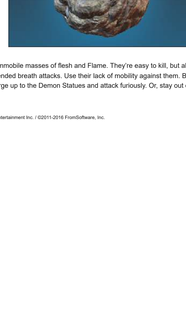
The Carthus Sandworm is a unique encounter in the Smouldering Lake. A monstrous worm that can fire devastating blasts of Lightning, it is a serious threat. Sprint past the area where the monster emerges, and look for a ledge above, up and to the right from where you first see the enemy. Get onto that ledge to avoid the ballistas and the Carthus Sandworm. Fire arrows or bolts from that ledge to kill this mini-boss and clear the area for future exploration.

War Machine and Worm

You're getting bombarded by a massive siege ballista, giant flaming crabs are trying to crush you, and then this thing roars out of the ground.

If you end up flattened the first time you venture down here and run into the worm, don't feel too bad, you're in good company. Also don't feel too bad about turning it into a pincushion from a distance.

Demon Statue



Demon Statues are almost immobile masses of flesh and Flame. They're easy to kill, but all of them do tremendous damage if you get caught in their extended breath attacks. Use their lack of mobility against them. Back away and kill any other types of defenders first. Then, charge up to the Demon Statues and attack furiously. Or, stay out of their range, and shoot them for safe kills.

Sulyvahn's Beast

There is one Beast in Irithyll that attacks you on the starting bridge that leads into the city. Later, you face two of them by the Water Reserve Bonfire.

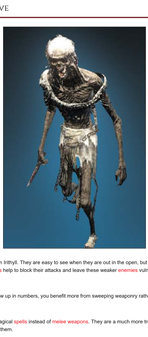
All of Sulyvahn's Beasts are unique targets. Dedicated combos kill them quickly, but they have equally dangerous attacks of their own, and they can punish reckless behavior. It's hard to back away, roll, or even sprint away from Sulyvahn's Beasts, so you have to treat like you would in a boss fight (not to avoid an attack, and use the enemy's recovery time as your healing window).

Roll sideways to stay close to these creatures when dodging, and come up swinging at them to get damage in before they attack again. Don't trade blows, and don't exhaust your combos. Use short groups of strikes, until the fight is almost over.

Irithyllian Beast-Hound

Irithyllian Beast-hounds behave exactly like the Starved Hounds that you are used to by this point in the game. However, these dogs are heavier targets and require more damage to kill, and a few of them have a Frost bite. Don't rely on single attacks to kill these foes. Back up while you're locked on, keep your shield raised, and hit each dog once after it bounces off of your shield.

Pontiff Knight



Pontiff Knights don't fight like the other varieties of knights that you encounter in Dark Souls III. They have their own timings and style of battle and it's hard to get used to initially. You may wish to employ a union of ranged attacks and then a sudden charge to kill each Pontiff Knight before it starts attacking. Blocking and dodging is very difficult against Pontiff Knights because their combos are fast.

Pull individuals to avoid getting a group of Pontiff Knights. These monsters patrol the Irithyll streets, so you never want to advance into your target.

Burning Stake Witch

Beware the Burning Stake Witch. Few enemies have such a solid combination of ranged damage and melee potential. Burning Stake Witches cast spells that hit hard and don't give you much time to roll aside. Even worse, they're usually in a position that is difficult to reach. You have to sprint all the way around to get to your target. That's triply dangerous in Irithyll because of the patrolling enemies.

Even when you're close to a Burning Stake Witch you have to be careful. They can cast their spells when you're hitting them, and they have a throw that does massive damage. Strike quickly, dodge, and keep the pressure on these foes as much as possible.

Irithyllian Slave

Irithyllian Slaves are plentiful in Irithyll. They are easy to see when they are out in the open, but become almost invisible when you are in dark places. Shields help to block their attacks and leave these weaker enemies vulnerable to any counterattack.

Because Irithyllian Slaves show up in numbers, you benefit more from sweeping weaponry rather than stabbing, single-target weapons.

Some Irithyllian Slaves use magical spells instead of melee weapons. They are a much more troublesome threat, and should be prioritized if you can reach them.

In dark areas of Irithyll, your shield should be held high almost all the time. This lets you avoid Irithyllian Slave attacks more often than not. Look for their burning eyes to spot them.

Sewer Centipede

The wet areas below Irithyll have Sewer Centipedes. Their hair stands out in the water as thick, dark strands. Use this feature to spot them and ambush these enemies before they wake. It's very easy to kill them with a few hits before they're able to get up.

If you see one Sewer Centipede, there are probably quite a few close by. They never appear by themselves in areas, but they're spread out enough for you to avoid being swarmed, as long as you're methodical about clearing all of them.

Silver Knight

Silver Knights use somewhat standard knight techniques, but they have Lightning attacks in addition to just physical attacks. This makes shield blocking less effective, because you're almost guaranteed to take damage even when you block successfully.

A two-handed weapon/stance can be much better for killing Silver Knights. The more damage you do per hit, the easier it is to take them out with one burst. These foes are very good at longer fights, so you want to end things quickly.

Ranged Silver Knights do high damage and and knock you back. They'll make each encounter extremely difficult if you're also being attacked by melee opponents. Hug the walls or use pillars for cover to break line of sight with them.

Jailer

Jailers are not normal enemies. They have several unique abilities, and you need to know how to fight them. Lure Jailers around corners; you never want to fight them at range or give them a clear view while they approach.

These enemies debuff your health while they're looking at you, and even if that doesn't kill you, it still counts as damage when the debuff eventually fades.

Jailers also have a Cursing gas attack. They'll do this when they're patrolling around. Listen for the "pssssshhh" sound effect so that you know when they're doing it. Don't rush into the cloud to attack the Jailer.

As long as you ambush Jailers while they're coming around corners, they can be dealt with.

Wretch

Many Wretches are locked inside cells. They're twisted and strange beasts, but they're easy to kill when alone. Only the cells with multiple Wretches are worrisome. Wretches don't move quickly, so it's wise to rush them, attack, and score a fast kill before they can do anything.

Against groups, rush in and kill one Wretch. Then, back off, get Stamina, and fight whichever Wretch is the most aggressive about reaching you.

One thing to watch out for, Wretches can deal heavy Durability damage. This is rarely an issue in most of the game. Unless you are using a low Durability weapon, or you've been out in the field for a long time without returning to a Bonfire, Wretches can really give your equipment a beating.

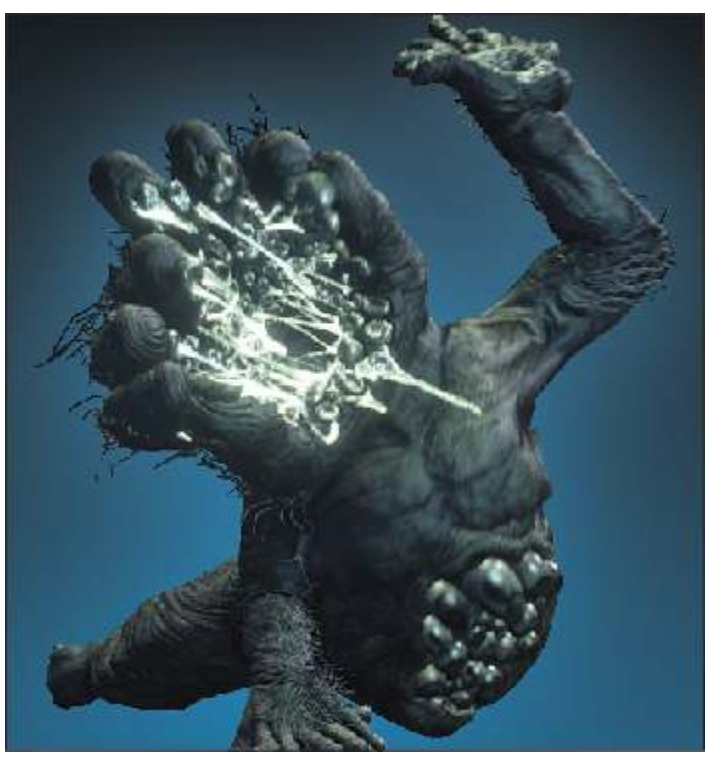
Headless Gargoyle

There are only a few Headless Gargoyles in the Profaned Capital. You also face them (with heads) in the Grand Archives.

Headless Gargoyles, if approached carefully, are often solitary targets. They have a lot of health and take damage well; they also choose their spots to attack you well. You never get to fight them on good ground. It's usually on a ledge or bridge, and dodging is very risky in those situations.

To defeat Headless Gargoyles, try to finish the fight quickly. Buff your Attack Power as much as you can (go into two-handed mode, switch to your most damaging weapon, use a weapon enchant, etc.). Trade with the Headless Gargoyle so that you kill it quickly and without much movement. Though costly, this is a better method then staying mobile and risking a lethal fall.

Monstrosity Of Sin



Several Monstrosities of Sin are lurking in a temple, on the eastern side of the capital. Each one has massive health. Although they are very slow, their attacks cover ground well and are very punishing.

No matter what position these targets get into, assume that they can flop, roll, or otherwise leap on top of you. As soon as they start moving, dodge backward and wait for them to whiff before resuming your attacks. Getting grabbed by one of these foul foes is extremely damaging and drains your Souls.

Jailer Handmaid

Jailer Handmaids guard the hallway before you reach the boss of the Profaned Capital. They have a cursing gas attack, fire attacks at range, and are seen in high numbers. Use hit-and-run tactics to thin their numbers and escape. Each Jailer Handmaid is easy to kill, but you die if you stick around and try to get the entire group in attempt. To avoid this, pick a target or two, rush in to kill them, and then dash out of the area.

The Pus of Man in the Garden are already active and quite ready to attack you, unlike the surprise ambushes long ago on the High Wall. Take them apart at a distance, or at the very least, away from the poisonous muck that coats the Garden.*

Consumed King's Knight

Consumed King's Knights are tough. They have the usual knight fighting style, but their stats are high and you don't get much room to maneuver when you're fighting them. The area's poisonous ground is bad enough, but there are also Pus of Man and other targets that you can back into while engaging in combat.

Bait the Consumed King's Knights from range to get them casting, or use extended combos to break their defense and leave them vulnerable.

Serpent-Man

Serpent-men are a smaller type of draconic foe. You find a few at the end of the Consumed King's Garden, but more lie in wait if you venture to their true home in Archdragon Peak. Block their fast attacks and respond with a few basic attacks to kill them.

The Hollows here are noticeably tougher than the ones from long ago on the High Wall. Don't let them mob you!*

Lothric Wyverns

The Lothric Wyverns are best killed with ranged weaponry from the Bonfire side of the bridge. Don't approach them, don't risk their flames, and accept that it takes many arrows to finish the job. Make sure to stock up before you start shooting at them, because running out of arrows when you're 70% through a dragon's health bar is more than counterproductive.

It is possible to kill the Wyverns in melee, both are controlled by an Abyssal infestation, not unlike Iudex Gundyr and the Pus of Man. If you make your way around the outskirts of the castle, you can reach their wings where the infestation manifests. Destroy it and the host Wyvern is slain instantly.

The Crystal Sage was a boss fight, here it's foe you have to battle as you work your way through the Archives!

Grand Archives Scholar

Many Grand Archives Scholars are inside the archives. They're normal casters when you're at long range, but they have a good trick if you get closer. These enemies spray you with wax, making it impossible to dodge for a short time. Instead, you wiggle in place and lose mobility while they cast spells at you.

First off, avoid the wax entirely. This is the best way to survive and kill them. Long-range shots work well because Grand Archives Scholars have low health. But, melee attacks are fine if you get in and score kills very quickly.

Second, walk away if you get wax onto your character. Don't try to dodge or fight in this state. Walk toward cover, heal if you need to, and come out once the wax fades.

Gertrude's Knight

Gertrude's Knights are the nastier versions of the Winged Knight. Tougher and harder hitting, they are still ponderous foes… until they take to the sky with their angelic wings!

Avoid their dangerous sweeping blows and holy magic. Use the available terrain to pick them off or back away as needed. There's plenty of open space where you encounter these winged knights, so make use of it.

Large Serpent-Man

Large Serpent-men are burlier, tougher Serpent-men; you can spot them from far away, and this gives you time to prepare. Even though they're armed for melee combat, you need to be careful. They can throw their chains quite far, giving them medium range for some of their attacks.

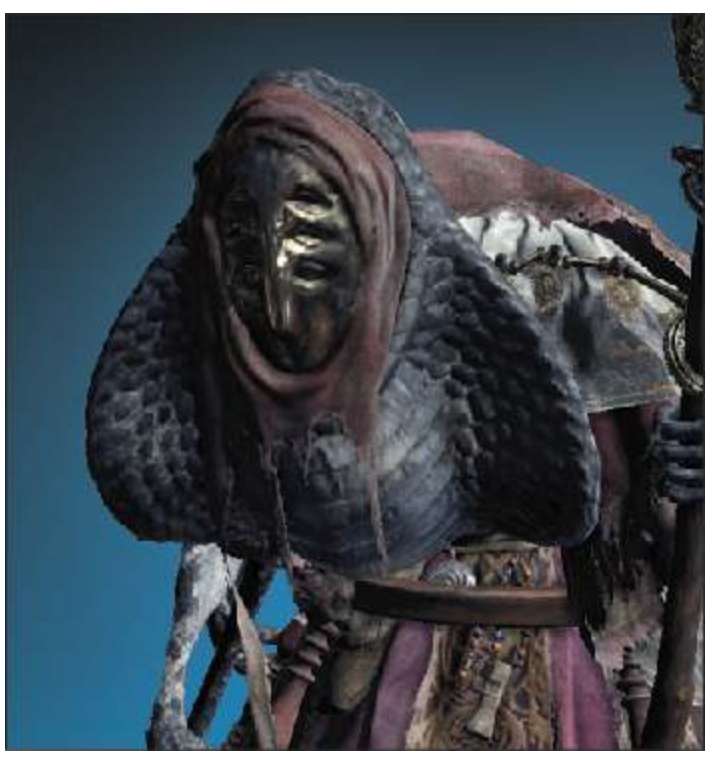
Multiple blows are needed to kill each Large Serpent-man. Circle around them and get hits in while they recover from their slower attacks. If there are Serpent-men in the fight too, focus on them first to take out targets quickly and consolidate your problems.

Rock Lizard

There are Rock Lizards on a few hills and ledges. They're uncommon targets. Block or dodge if they roll toward you, and never stand with your back to a ledge when a Rock Lizard is close by, or you risk a fatal fall.

Rock Lizards are a sort of petrified Crystal Lizard, and a repeatable source of both Twinkling Titanite and Titanite Scales!

Serpent-Man Summoner



The sound of a chime periodically rings when you go into a room with a Serpent-man Summoner. When that happens, an Unkindled rises to come after you. These summoned enemies are worth their full Soul value, so you can farm them if you like. However, the battle won't end until you kill the Serpent-man Summoner. A fast run takes you past the Unkindled as they're forming. You usually get to kill the Serpent-man Summoner and then turn to take out the Unkindled.

Even if you wait, there will only be one Unkindled at a time. The Serpent-man Summoners just get themselves ready to call another one, but they won't complete the spell until you finish your target (they're polite).

The two Summoners here each summon a unique champion, one drops Ricard's Rapier, the other the Drakeblood Greatsword.

The Bestiary
Dark Spirits

Dark Spirits invade your world as red phantoms in some areas—these invasions are identical to an invasion by another player, with the obvious exception that these are AI controlled NPCs.

Because the specific challenge of the phantom depends on their loadout, you may find yourself facing a heavily armored melee tank, a lightweight ranged caster, or a nimble melee dodger.

The Undead Hunter Charm is of particular use against NPC Phantoms, it shuts down the use of Estus, which prevents these foes from healing! However, you can achieve the same goal with a simple Throwing Knife if you have one equipped and act fast, but keep the option in mind.

Phantoms block your ability to leave the area with fog doors, just like regular multiplayer invaders do, so you must defeat them before you can escape.

NPC Questlines
Overview

The quests and stories in Dark Souls III are extremely hard to find and complete until you've already played the game (a few times, for most players). This chapter tells you how to make progress with a variety of the game's NPCs. You learn about the gifts they give you, the dangers they pose, and so forth.

Be warned that while we do not explicitly spoil the stories of each NPC, this chapter should be avoided if you want to experience the various quests and NPC encounters in the world blind on your first playthrough.

NPC Questlines

Andre the Blacksmith

Andre the Blacksmith begins in the Firelink Shrine and stays there the entire time. He serves multiple functions, with most of them allowing your character to become more powerful and to survive greater dangers.

Bring him upgrade materials to improve your weapons and shields. Special, named Coals give him the ability to Infuse equipment in additional ways; he'll be able to make them scale to different attributes, or to gain special aspects (e.g. Bleed, Frost, Poison).

Take Estus Shards to Andre so that you get even more uses out of your Flasks for each time you stop at a Bonfire. He'll also let you decide how many of yours Flasks go toward Health or FPs.

Andre returns to the shrine if you kill him, but he won't craft anything for you, or serve any of his other functions. That's fair, he doesn't like being murdered! To get his loyalty back, go to the Undead Settlement. Near the Dilapidated Bridge Bonfire is a sewer area. Down there you find an altar to Velka. Bring plenty of Souls, pay for your sins, and be absolved.

Andre Infusions

Material	Coal Required
Refined, Raw, Fire, Shriving	None
Heavy, Sharp, Poison	Farron Coal
Crystal, Blessed, Deep	Sage's Coal
Simple, Chaos, Lightning	Giant's Coal
Dark, Blood, Hollow	Profaned Coal

NPC Questlines

Anri and Horace

Anri is a very important NPC that you meet as you start working your way through the Road of Sacrifices. This NPC is going to be a man if you're playing a female character, or a woman if you're playing a male.

Anri is a good person who is traveling with Horace, a quiet Knight. Anri seems like an honorable Unkinkled. Talk to Anri and Horace when you meet them. Horace gives you the Blue Sentinels Covenant item, and Anri will move on and be found elsewhere in the future. Anri's chain of events is incredibly elaborate, so bear with us while we explain how to follow them.

If you are aiming for the Hollow Lord ending, look up Yuria in this chapter so that you make sure that she is summoned in your playthrough. You can't complete the Hollow Lord story without Yuria.

Anri's Story

- Halfway Fortress Bonfire: Talk to Anri several times
- After Killing Deacons of the Deep: Return after beating the Deacons and search around the shrine. You find Anri there, to the left of the thrones. Talk to Anri a couple of times to advance the quest. This is not required.
- Catacombs of Carthus, Upper Level: Meet Anri not too far from the front of the Catacombs. From the entrance bridge, look for a staircase below and to your right. The hallway you want is on the other side of those stairs is has a visible entrance from where you are. Talk to Anri and say nothing when asked if you've seen Horace. Exhaust this dialogue.
- Catacombs of Carthus, Second Level: Anri is on a side ledge, close to the collapsing bridge that divides the area between the upper Catacombs and the lower area of Smouldering Lake. Anri is still looking for Horace. You can't say anything about Horace at first. He is directly underneath that position, though the fall would be fatal. You have to go down to the Smouldering Lake and find him down a side tunnel, off of the main cavern. When you return, after seeing him, you have the option to tell Anri.
- To keep Anri alive, don't say anything. Or, travel down there and kill Horace the Hushed before speaking with Anri about it. Horace is in a distant side chamber, past a Crystal Lizard. It's a somewhat tough fight.
- Regardless of what you choose to do, Anri gives you the Ring of the Evil Eye if you mention where you saw Horace. This is a very nice item that helps with keep your health high after battles (though you get it during the next step if you don't tell Anri anything).
- Horace drops the Llewellyn Shield if you kill him.
- If you do not kill Horace, but tell Anri of his whereabouts, Anri perishes in the lake at his chamber, dropping his blade there.
- Irithyll: Go to the Church of Yorshka Bonfire and look for Anri on the right side of the room. Talk Anri and get the Ring of the Evil Eye now. Complete the rest of the region, and summon Anri to help fight Pontiff Sulyvahn.
- Return to the Firelink Shrine and talk to Yuria several times. She'll let you know that the marriage ceremony is ready.
- Find the tower at the end of Irithyll (just a few steps away from Anor Londo). A secret wall disappears if you arrive here for the marriage ceremony. Go down that side hallway and talk to a Pilgrim. She gives you the Sword of Avowal. Keep going down the hall and use the sword for a ritual inside the next room. This grants the final three Dark Sigils needed to complete the Hollow Lord ending. However… if you do not wish to become such a Lord, there is another way.
- Before you defeat Pontiff Sulyvahn, there is a chance to save Anri, at least for the moment. When you meet Anri in the Church of Yorshka, hidden in the room are a group of statues. One of those statues is the Pilgrim of Londor, spying on the intended bride (or groom). Attack and kill the Pilgrim here and now to stop the ceremony! If you fail to kill the Pilgrim here, even if you have not encountered (or have angered) Yuria, Anri will still end up dead in the ceremony chamber, someone in some other world has wed Anri.
- Killing the Pilgrim allows you to use Anri as a White Phantom against Sulyvahn as usual, but later, when you go to face Aldrich in Anor Londo, Anri places a summoning sign outside the door. Use the sign and you can join Anri to fight his/her version of Aldrich.
- If you do so and successfully aid him/her in defeating Aldrich, Anri leaves the blade with Ludleth for you, and departs.
- Where Anri departs to depends on if you told Anri of Horace's death. If you did, Anri travels to the grave site in the Smouldering Lake. If not, Anri travels to the graves in the Cathedral of the Deep near the entrance.
- Unfortunately, either way, Anri finishes this long journey maddened, and attacks you on sight. Anri's death anywhere along this chain results in the Shrine Handmaid selling the Elite Knight armor set, while Horace leaves the Executioner's Armor.

NPC Questlines

Cornyx the Pyromancer

Cornyx is a mage who is trapped in the Undead Settlement. Search for him in a cage that is above the road through town. You can't get to it without finding a way up to the rooftops. Ironically, this means that you need to look for a path below the main road. As you cross a stone bridge Peasant Hollows ahead begin to throw Firebombs at you. That's the right area.

Drop off the side of the pathway to get onto a ledge beneath that village. You soon discover a Bonfire, and the path leads through a basement and up to the rooftops from the other side. Cornyx is easy to find from there. Let him join your cause, and he'll teleport to the Firelink Shrine.

Once there, he'll sell you Pyromancy spells. You find Tomes to expand his repertoire throughout the game. Bring them to him to improve his inventory.

If slain, he drops Ashes of Cornyx and Cornyx's Armor Set.

Unlike the other elaborate questlines here, Cornyx is remarkably straightforward. The only unusual secret he is connected to involves the White Phantom Great Swamp Cuculus in the Smouldering Lake. If you summon that phantom and defeat the Old Demon King, you can then journey to Cornyx's original imprisonment site, where you can find the Spotted Whip, and a set of Cornyx's garb.

NPC Questlines

Greirat

Greirat is locked in a small cell underneath the High Wall of Lothric. You find this dungeon by going to the Tower on the Wall Bonfire, climbing to the bottom of its tower, and exploring the hallway down there.

To unlock Greirat, look for a Cell Key as you make your way toward the Winged Knight from Tower on the Wall, past the shapechanging cultist, down a ladder, and into a building at the bottom. Search it for the Cell Key.

Unlock Greirat the next time you see him. He'll ask you to find a friend of his, named Loretta. She's in the Undead Settlement, supposedly. He'll hand you a Blue Tearstone Ring to take to her. Agree to do this to win his friendship.

After being freed, Greirat goes to the Firelink Shrine. He'll be a merchant there. Loretta's Bones are in the Undead Settlement, not far from the Undead Settlement Bonfire. Bring her bones back to Greirat. He'll let you keep the ring.

With these things done, Greirat continues as a merchant but also offers to go out into the world. He'll pillage from various areas to improve his selection. You can prevent him from doing this, or allow him to collect as he sees fit.

Allowing him to pillage the Undead Settlement is safe. If you let him Pillage Irithyll without either Siegward present there, or telling Unbreakable Patches where he went, he will die in Irithyll, leaving his Ashes in the sewer.

If you send him to pillage Lothric Castle, he dies regardless of whether you tell Patches where he went.

If you kill Greirat, he'll drop Ashes of Greirat and a Bandit's Knife.

NPC Questlines

Hawkwood the Deserter

Hawkwood is a desolate man who stays in the Firelink Shrine. You meet him at the beginning of the game, when you first arrive at the shrine. He likes to hang out near the thrones, sitting with his legs kicked over the side of a ledge.

Speak with Hawkwood after defeating the Greatwood or Crystal Sage bosses to acquire a Heavy Gem. Defeat the Abyss Watchers and speak with him to acquire the Farron Ring.

You may occasionally find Hawkwood paying his respects to a grave outside the shrine on the right side…

After you have exhausted Hawkwood's dialogue and defeated all three of the above bosses, Hawkwood departs, leaving Hawkwood's Shield at the grave. At this point, you won't see Hawkwood for a long time. He'll appear again as a White Phantom sign in the Consumed King's Garden.

After that, if you find your way to Archdragon Peak, his White Phantom sign can be found not far from the third bonfire. Activating it causes Hawkwood to travel up to the shrine at the end of the trail, where he prays and vanishes.

If you follow suit and use the Path of the Dragon gesture at the shrine and acquire the Twinkling Dragon Torso Stone, Hawkwood leaves a message with Blacksmith Andre in the shrine, challenging you to a duel. If you travel to the Abyss Watcher's room in Farron Keep and face Hawkwood, defeating him earns you the Twinkling Dragon Head Stone, but losing loses the Torso stone.

NPC Questlines

Irina of Carim

Irina starts in the Undead Settlement, toward the very end of the region. She's locked behind a door that can only be opened if you take the sewers all the way under the area. To open this, you need the Grave Key.

Explore the cemetery, by the white birch. This is where the gigantic arrows strike. You find Ashes there that should be taken back to Firelink Shrine. Give them to the Shrine Handmaid, buy the Grave Key from her, and return to the sewers.

On the far side, you meet Irina (and then Eygon as well). When you meet Irina, show her some warmth and then agree to take her into your service. She'll travel to Firelink Shrine and act as your teacher for Miracles. To expand her inventory, bring Braille Tomes back to her.

Learning Dark Miracles from Irina has consequences. If you give her the Deep or Londor Tomes and then purchase any Dark Miracles from her, she falls to darkness, and Eygon will kidnap her to try to save her from your corruption.

If you buy all of the Dark Miracles, she falls completely to darkness and no longer acts as a vendor. Interact with her for some sad dialogue. Or interact with her while wearing Eygon's gauntlets for some truly sad dialogue.

However, there is a brighter path. If you purchase all of the holy Miracles instead, she becomes a Fire Keeper, and moves to the basement of the tower just outside the Firelink Shrine!

If you had previously given her the dark Tomes (but did not buy any Dark Miracles), she will leave both of them on the ground beside her, and you can retrieve them to teach Karla instead.

Eygon of Carim

Eygon is a warrior who is charged with guarding Irina. He's a terse individual, and isn't very friendly. However, he'll do his job. If you release Irina from her cell (in the Undead Settlement), Eygon will agree to let her travel to the Firelink Shrine. Should you harm Irina, he'll turn aggressive on you.

If you purchase any Dark Miracles from Irina, she will fall to darkness, and Eygon will kidnap her. You can encounter him just outside the Iudex Gundyr bonfire when this occurs. If you do not anger Eygon, his last appearance is as a White Phantom for the Dragonslayer Armour battle, after which his corpse appears in Irina's original cell in the Undead Settlement.

NPC Questlines

Karla the Witch

Karla is a witch who is imprisoned in Irithyll Dungeon. She's inside a cell that you find when you're almost all the way to the Profaned City. Get the key to her cell, unlock it, and talk to Karla. If you agree to let her out, she'll go to the Firelink Shrine and teach powerful, dark magics there.

There are Tomes that can't be understood by Cornyx. Those are the ones that have to be given to Karla. These dark magics are imposing, but she is able to learn them and teach the spells to your character. Karla can handle the dark magic far better than the frail Irina can, there are no negative consequences to teaching or learning dark magic from her.

If you kill her, Ashes of Karla drop, as well as Karla's Armor Set.

NPC Questlines

Leonhard, The Ringfinger

Leonhard usually spends time near the thrones for the Lords of Cinder (in Firelink Shrine). He first appears after you light the Tower on the Wall bonfire in the High Wall, or after defeating Vordt. Speak with him to acquire 5 Cracked Red-Eye Orbs, which can be used to invade other players as a hostile Red Phantom.

Once you light the Cliff Underside bonfire in the Undead Settlement, or defeat the Curse Rotted Greatwood and you have a Pale Tongue in your inventory, Leonhard reappears in the shrine. Speak with him to acquire the Lift-Chamber Key. You can use this key to descend through a locked door in the High Wall of Lothric, beneath the Tower on the Wall bonfire. Deep in the chamber is a Darkwraith. Defeat it, and you can acquire a full Red Eye Orb, which can be used for unlimited invasions of other players. Defeating the Darkwraith also causes Leonhard to appear once more in the shrine.

Your next encounter with Leonhard only occurs if you join Rosaria's Fingers in the Cathedral of the Deep and offer or use at least one Pale Tongue (though be aware that doing so antagonizes Sirris of the Sunless Realm if you are pursuing her questline). Leonhard appears at the exit to her chamber after you do so.

Still later, after you have joined Rosaria's Fingers and you have reached the Profaned Capital bonfire or defeated Yhorm the Giant, Leonhard slays Rosaria. Return to her body to find the Black Eye Orb. Take the Orb to the highest room in Anor Londo, it will activate, allowing you to invade Leonhard and slay him to recover Rosaria's Soul, as well as the Crescent Moon Sword and the Silver Mask. This also causes the Shrine Handmaid to sell Leonhard's Armor set.

NPC Questlines

Ludleth of Courtland

Ludleth is one of the Lords of Cinder. He sits on top of his throne, in the Firelink Shrine. Talk to him early on to see how the small but ominous fellow is doing.

Once you kill the Curse-rotted Greatwood, you should return to Ludleth and give him the Transposition Kiln that you receive from that boss. This lets Ludleth turn the special souls that you get from bosses into special items. Many are weapons, but spells and rings are in that bunch as well! If you don't see things that you like, you can still convert the boss' materials into Souls later to try and buy others things or to raise your level.

If you kill Ludleth, you get the Skull Ring (it makes you easier to detect). Ludleth returns from the dead, and he takes the whole thing in stride.

Should you progress Anri's storyline far into the game, he will leave Anri's Straight Sword with Ludleth for you to retrieve.

NPC Questlines

Holy Knight Hodrick

Hodrick is a mad Hollow knight, a servant of the Mound Makers Covenant. It is possible to encounter him in a few locations throughout the game, as a Mound Maker PvP summon, or if you pursue Sirris questline, as a foe in her world.

Reaching Hodrick in your world alive is tricky, to say the least. He resides in the Pit of Hollows, beneath the Rotted Greatwood. However, if you kill that boss, the floor collapses during the battle, killing Hodrick.

The only way to meet Hodrick alive is to locate a Hollow Manservant wearing a cage on its back, just north of Item 12 on our Undead Settlement map. Approach it quietly from behind and you can press the use key on the cage to enter the cage and you will be deposited in the Pit of Hollows!

NPC Questlines

Orbeck of Vinheim

Orbeck is a mage and an assassin. He is studying near the Crystal Sage boss fight, in the Road of Sacrifices. If you have at least 10 Intelligence, he'll offer to join you and travel to Firelink Shrine.

Orbeck's pact with you is a promise to deliver him scrolls for study. Fail to do so by killing four bosses without giving him a single scroll and he departs forever.

You can obtain the Young Dragon Ring and the Slumbering Dragon Ring by speaking with Orbeck.

For the Young ring, buy at least three sorceries, give him one scroll and be playing any non-Sorcerer starting class (though he gives this ring on New Game+ to any starting class). For the Slumbering ring, purchase Aural Decoy, Farron Flashsword, and Pestilent Mercury.

Finally, if you manage to provide him with all of the scrolls in the game and buy all of the spells, he speaks with you politely before departing. You can then find his White Phantom summon sign on the battlements near the Twin Princes battle in the Grand Archives.

After defeating the Twin Princes, you can find Orbeck dead in the Grand Archives, where you can pick up his ashes. At least he died surrounded by his favored books of sorcery…

Yuria of Londor may task you with eliminating Orbeck. Do so, and she rewards you with the Morion Blade.

NPC Questlines

Shrine Handmaid

The Shrine Handmaid will always be at the Firelink Shrine. She serves as a major merchant for the area throughout all of your playthroughs. You can't kill her, at least, not for long. Attacking her gets you very little. In fact, she'll raise her prices by 20% when she returns, so you're really hurting yourself no matter how you look at it.

As with the Smith, you can restore the Handmaid's prices by visiting the altar to Velka (in the Undead Settlement). Pay your Souls for absolution and the Shrine Handmaid will return to her regular prices.

The Shrine Handmaid acquires new inventory by providing her with Ashes. She also sells new equipment after you defeat certain bosses and enemies, and complete various NPC questlines (or kill them!).

This table covers all items she normally sells, plus items for giving her Ashes. If you spot an armor set in the Equipment chapter with its location as the Shrine Handmaid, you need to kill the NPC or boss associated with that set to unlock it.

There is a second Shrine Handmaid hidden in the game, located in the Untended Graves, she sells a few unique items.

Placing all of the Lord's Ashes upon their thrones causes the Handmaid to sell a single Titanite Slab.

NPC Questlines

Unbreakable Patches

Patches is a disreputable sort who you can first encounter in the Cathedral of the Deep. If you open the front doors leading out to the graveyard, then leave and return, he appears on the second floor by the large gate leading to the pool of slime. You may find your interactions with him end poorly, but if you forgive him, you can eventually acquire his services as a merchant back in the shrine. You can find and speak with him a second time in the cathedral by using the rafters to cross over to Rosaria's side of the second floor, where he is waiting.

However, if you bypass the front door route (or don't leave and return) and travel over the rafters above the cathedral to reach Rosaria, you won't encounter Patches in the Cathedral.

Either way, to meet him a second time, return to the Firelink Shrine, purchase the Tower Key and head up to the top of the tower where the Firekeeper's Soul rests. When you come back down the lift, you will find Patches has locked the door. Descend through the tower and emerge out the door at the bottom.

Again, if you forgive him, you can retain his services as a merchant. He resides up on the upper level of the Firelink Shrine. Patches sells Siegward's armor set, and indeed, you need to purchase it to save Siegward from being trapped down a well without it outside the Cathedral of the Deep's Cleansing Chapel!

Finally, Patches has a fair bit of respect for Greirat, the thief. Should you attack Greirat, this will enrage Patches and he will attack. If you send Greirat to pillage Irithyll and tell Patches, he will travel there to rescue him (assuming Siegward isn't already there, as Siegward can also save Greirat). If you send Greirat to pillage Lothric Castle, Patches will try to save him, but fail…

NPC Questlines

Rosaria

Rosaria is the Covenant leader for Rosaria's Fingers, the PvP Covenant. Located in the Cathedral of the Deep, her room can only be reached by climbing over the rafters high above the cathedral floor.

Rosaria also acts as the only source of a few very special services. You can respec your attributes completely by visiting her, and you can change your appearance. Both require Pale Tongues. You are limited to five respecs or rebirths on a single playthrough, but if you venture into new game territory, you can do so again.

There is a subplot involving Ringfinger Leonhard and his relationship with both you and Rosaria. If you follow Leonhard's story up to the point of retrieving the Red Eye Orb from the Darkwraith in High Wall and then come to the Cathedral and join Rosaria's Fingers, he appears just outside her chambers to greet you.

Later, after reaching the Profaned Capital bonfire or defeating Yhorm, if you return here, you will find Rosaria dead! Pick up the Black Eye Orb from her body and carry it with you to Anor Londo. In the room at the top of the cathedral there, past the Aldrich boss fight, the Black Eye Orb triggers, allowing you to invade Leonhard and slay him to recover Rosaria's Soul. Return her soul and she revives as though nothing occurred.

Finally, joining Rosaria's Fingers angers Sirris' of the Sunless Realms. If you are pursuing her story fully, you cannot join Rosaria in the same playthrough.

NPC Questlines

Siegward of Catarina

Siegward is a knight of Catarina. You first meet him in the Undead Settlement. He'll come up a lift as you prepare to finish the region and leave for the Road of Sacrifices. Talk to Siegward a few times to finish his dialogue there.

He'll move to a balcony slightly higher along that same lift. Roll off of the lift when it's on its way up, and talk to him more to find out what he's going there. He wants to stop the arrows that are coming from that tower. If you befriend the Giant up top, this will succeed.

Either way, Siegward will join you as an ally in battle if you descend from his balcony and go toward the town that's close by. There is a powerful Demon there that can (and should) be killed. Help Siegward in that fight and then talk with him a few times afterward. You get his Siegbrau as a reward, and he'll teach you Toast and Sleep gestures too.

Siegward is next found in a bind in the Cathedral of the Deep. Trapped down a well just outside the Cleansing Shrine bonfire chapel, you need to recover his full Catarina armor from Patches and give it to him there. Do so and he'll teach you the Rejoice gesture and venture on to Irithyll Valley.

Meeting Siegward in Irithyll Valley is rewarding, as he grants you the Emit Force miracle, another gesture, and, should you send Greirat to pillage Irithyll while Siegward is present, he automatically saves the little thief from death. You can find him resting by the pot of Estus Soup in the kitchen just above the sewers.

Finally, in Irithyll Dungeon, you find Siegward in another bind. He's been captured and locked in a cell. Find the Key to unlock and release him. This is well rewarded, because Siegward gives you a Titanite Slab for your efforts! If you help Siegward through all of that, he'll be able to return the favor when you go against Yhorm the Giant at the end of the Profaned Capital. After the battle, you can return to Yhorm's room and retrieve the full Catarina Armor set from Siegward, as well as a second Storm Ruler sword, and his shield.

NPC Questlines

Sirris of the Sunless Realms

This valorous Blade of the Darkmoon appears in Firelink Shrine after you reach Farron Keep. Speak to her, and then explore Farron Keep to find the Dreamchaser's Ashes. Deliver those to the Shrine Handmaid, and Sirris will appear again, offering the Darkmoon Loyalty gesture.

At this point, her White Phantom sign appears in Farron Keep and the Cathedral of the Deep.

When you reach Irithyll Valley after you battle Sulyvahn's Beast on the bridge at the entrance to the town, leave and return to check the front of the bridge. There you can find a summoning sign from Sirris. Enter her world and aid her against the invader Creighton the Wanderer. Successfully defend Sirris and she'll show up in the shrine again to thank you, and give you a Blessed Mail Breaker. In addition, Creighton now invades you later in Irithyll Valley, and after defeating him for his Dragonslayer's Axe, Creighton's Armor set appears in the middle of the bridge at the entrance to the town.

Finally, she has one last summoning event directly in front of the Curse Rotted Greatwood's room. To trigger it, you must defeat both the Greatwood and Aldrich in Anor Londo. Because slaying the Greatwood causes Hodrick to perish, you may wish to visit him before killing the Greatwood.

Successfully aid her in her battle when she summons you to acquire the Sunset Armor set, and she returns to the Shrine and asks to swear an oath of knighthood to you. In addition, she leaves the Sunset Shield by the grave of her grandfather. To find it, look off the right side of the cliff, just past the doors from Iudex Gundyr's room.

If you accept her vow, she appears as a White Phantom for Dragonslayer Armour and the Twin Princes battles in Lothric Castle and the Grand Archives. Complete those battles, and you later find her corpse by her grandfather's grave, along with the Sunless Talisman.

Should you refuse her offer of knighthood however, she is found Hollow and aggressive in the Pit of Hollows.

Fully completing her storyline, or killing her causes the Shrine Handmaid to sell the Sunless Armor set.

NPC Questlines

The Fire Keeper

The Fire Keeper lives in the Firelink Shrine. She'll allow you to spend Souls to improve your character. Talk to her to learn a bit more about her purpose, but don't try to harm her. When slain, she'll simply return. If you perform an emote in front of the Fire Keeper, she may respond with a gesture of her own. Try them all...

Choices, Choices

The Fire Keeper can be given Eyes of a Fire Keeper and the Soul of a Fire Keeper. The Soul is found on the tower above the shrine. Buy the Tower Key from the Shrine Handmaid, unlock the tower, and follow that route up to get the Fire Keeper Soul. Give the Fire Keeper that soul; she gains the power to remove the Dark Sigil from you. This costs many Souls, but can be done at any time as long as you can afford it.To get the Eyes of a Fire Keeper look up the Untended Graves section of the Walkthrough. Go to that area and search for a hidden door in that region (it's in the spot where Irina would be if you were in the real Firelink Shrine).

To use the Eyes of a Fire Keeper, talk to the Fire Keeper and give them to her. Talk to her twice afterward to hear everything about them. Then, talk to the Fire Keeper again when you're at the end of the game. She'll say to summon her instead of Linking the First Flame.

Beat the final boss normally, and then approach the First Flame (the Bonfire that appears). Instead of lighting it, look for a white summoning sign on the group. Use that sign to summon the Fire Keeper and get the dark ending to the game, or summon and attack her when you regain control for an alternate ending.

Until you actually do all of this, you can change your mind. Slaying the Fire Keeper lets you take the Eyes back, preventing the alternate ending from occurring. Also, Linking the First Flame gets you the standard ending even if you've given the Fire Keeper her eyes.

NPC Questlines

The Giant of the Undead Settlement

A Giant lives on top of a fort in the Undead Settlement. This massive creature shoots arrows down toward a white birch far away. When you're traveling through the Undead Settlement, you might get hit or even killed by these arrows. Your enemies are also targeted, though that's only of marginal help because you're so busy trying not to get splattered.

To stop the arrows, go to the fort and take the lift that goes to the top of the building. Meet the Giant and either talk to him or kill him. If you're friendly and give him one of the branches from the white birch, he'll stop shooting his bow at you when you're down in the valley. If you kill him, that works as a long-term solution as well.

Remaining friendly with him can help you in a few places later, there are white birch trees in both Faron Keep's swamp, and in the graveyard outside the Cathedral of the Deep.

He'll shoot at any foes near any of the three trees, and won't target you if you carry a white branch, or wear either the Worker's Hat or Evangelist's Hat.

If you pick up all of the white tree branches and return, you find the Giant has peacefully expired, leaving the Hawk Ring. Or you can kill him to take it, you monster.

The Nestling of Firelink Shrine (Snuggly the Crow)

A Nestling, rumored to be named Snuggly, lives on top of the Firelink Shrine. Get onto the bridge above the shrine, using a key that you can purchase from the Shrine Handmaid. Jump off of the bridge, onto the roof, and look for a nest close by. Stand inside the nest and look at your inventory. Select an item, “Leave” it, and then see if the Nestling will exchange that item for something more interesting.

Each playthrough only allows you to trade one of each item type on the list. In New Game Plus, you can go back and start trading again, so remember to do that! Many of these trades are quite advantageous, so keep an eye out for these opportunities.

NPC Questlines

Yoel of Londor

Yoel is discovered in the earliest part of the Undead Settlement. From the Foot of the High Wall, you descend to a road with Starved Hounds and weaker undead. Kill these targets and look along a desolate stretch to your left. Many petrified pilgrims are there. Look around until you find one that is alive. He'll talk to you. Agree to let him enter your service and he'll travel to the Firelink Shrine. There, he'll help you learn magic. Speak to Yoel in the shrine and he can use Draw Out True Power. This lets you gain a 'free' level, but beware, nothing is without cost. Each time he draws out your power you acquire a Dark Sigil item. While in possession of these sigils, each time you die, you gain Hollowing Points, and your appearance becomes ever more corpse-like.

The only way to cure the Dark Sigil is to give the Fire Keeper the Firekeeper's Soul and pay her in Souls to remove the Sigils. The cost can become extremely expensive, you must pay the cost of your next Level times the number of Dark Sigils you are carrying. Hollowing points (and the curse of your undead appearance) can be reversed by using a Purging Stone, but doing so does not remove the Dark Sigils, only the Fire Keeper can cleanse them.

To fully draw out your strength, you must gain a certain amount of Hollowing. The fastest way to do this is simply jump to your death repeatedly at the shrine and return to speak to Yoel at 2, 6, and 12 Hollowing to gain more Dark Sigils (and levels). Once your Hollowing is progressed enough, he grants you the fifth Dark Sigil. Three more Dark Sigils can be acquired by completing Anri's wedding questline, and finishing the game with all eight in your possession triggers the Hollow Lord ending.

However, your time with Yoel is limited. Whether you take him home or leave him here, he will not survive deep into the playthrough. If you reach the Catacombs of Carthus, or use Draw Out True Strength five times, Yoel expires. Even leaving him out in the wild will change little, save the location of his corpse. Some things can't be changed.

NPC Questlines

Yorshka

There is a massive tower near Anor Londo that you can't reach easily. Start at the Anor Londo Bonfire and backtrack to the highest tower in Irithyll; it's just a few steps away. Use the mechanism of that tower to lower the walkway where you're positioned.

From the tower's lower setting, walk out onto the edge of the walkway. It looks like it's hovering over nothing. Just empty air. Trust in the fates and step onto that nothingness. It's an invisible bridge. Walk from there over to a tower that's close by, but a bit lower than where you're standing. Hop off to get onto the balcony of that tower and use a Bonfire there.

Yorshka, a Covenant leader, is around the corner. Talk to her and pledge yourself to her Covenant if you wish. Also, drop through the broken supports and beams inside that tower to get extra loot!

NPC Questlines

Yuria of Londor

Yuria of Londor is a key NPC for reaching the Hollow Lord ending. She only appears in the Firelink Shrine if you use Draw Out True Strength from Yoel of Londor five times to acquire five Dark Sigils. This must be done before reaching the Catacombs of Carthus, as Yoel passes away when you do.

If Anri dies early or Yoel dies before you draw out all sigils, Yuria leaves and the Pale Shade of Londor invades in Farron Keep and Irithyll Valley. Defeating it in both places causes the Pale Shade armor set to appear in the room where Yoel and Yuria reside.

Yuria also becomes angered if you heal the Dark Sigil, or you kill the Pilgrim of Londor in Irithyll Valley before the ceremony is complete. While Yuria is friendly, the Pale Shade of Londor appears as a White Phantom in Farron Keep and Irithyll Valley.

If you progress all the way to the end game after the ceremony with Yuria still friendly, both her and the Pale Shade leave White Phantom signs for the final battle. Defeating the final boss with her still alive causes her to leave her armor and weapon where she stood in Firelink Shrine.

Gestures

Gesture List

Gesture	Name	How to Learn
	Bow	Automatic
	Joy	Automatic
	Jump for Joy	Automatic
	Point Down	Automatic
	Point Forward	Automatic
	Point Up	Automatic
	Wave	Automatic
	Applause	Leonhard teaches this to you after you get the Red Eye Orb from the Darkwraith.
	Beckon	Talk to Yoel after he arrives in the Firelink Shrine.
	By My Sword	Summon Black Hand Gotthard from a white sign.
	Call Over	Give a Homeward Bone to the Crow.
	Collapse	Talk to Hawkmoon in the Firelink Shrine.
	Curl Up	Free Greirat from the High Wall of Lothric and accept his quest. Get Loretta's Bone in the Undead Settlement and give it to Greirat. You see him curling up in the future. Talk to him when he's in this position.
	Darkmoon Loyalty	Talk to Sirris in the Firelink Shrine (avoid joining Rosaria's Covenant if you want to complete Sirris' quest).
	Dignified Bow	Get your character's Hollowing up and Draw Out True Strength with Yoel so that Yuria arrives in the Firelink Shrine. Talk to her to learn this gesture.
	Duel Bow	You must have five Dark Sigils by Drawing Out True Strength with Yoel. Then you have a chance to be invaded by the Londor Pale Shade, which teaches you the Gesture.
	Hurrah!	Exhaust Andre the Blacksmith's speech options.
	Legion Etiquette	Look for the Old Wolf in Farron Keep.
	My Thanks!	Fight Tsorig, an Invader in the Demon Ruins.
	Patches Squat	Meet Patches, recruit him in the Cathedral of the Deep, get locked in the tower at the Firelink Shrine, and then forgive Patches.
	Path of the Dragon	Kill Oceiros in the Consumed King's Garden and enter the tunnel behind his room. A dead body in the room has this gesture.
	Praise the Sun	Use the Altar of Sunlight near the end of Lothric Castle.
	Prayer	Talk to Irina in the Undead Settlement.
	Proper Bow	Fight Hazel, an Invader in Farron Keep. Afterward, give a Pale Tongue to Rosaria (in Cathedral of the Deep). You can then summon Hazel from the southern tower in Farron Keep before you fight the Abyss Watchers.
	Prostration	You get this gesture from Patches if you don't forgive him. You can also get it if you say "You Know Who I Am" when confronting him in the Cathedral of the Deep.
	Quiet Resolve	Meet Anri in the Church of Yorshka. This one is easy to miss if Anri gets killed earlier in the quest line, so carefully read through Anri's quest.
	Rest	Learned when you first rest at a Bonfire.
	Rejoice	You get this gesture from Siegward later in his quest line, after helping him get his armor back.
	Silent Ally	Talk to Orbeck after purchasing a ring and many of his spells.
	Sleep	Siegward also gives you this gesture after the Demon battle in Undead Settlement.
	Stretch Out	Go to the Profaned Capital Bonfire and search close by for this gesture.
	Toast	Defeat the Demon in the Undead Settlement and talk to Siegward after the fight.
	Welcome	Talk to Cornyx after he arrives in the Firelink Shrine.
